ABOVE BOARD.

During the last few months of the war one of the most striking events in the development of the labor question occurred in England.

Employees of an English channel line had demanded higher wages ble was caused by disordered kidon the threat of calling a strike. Wise heads intervened and a conference between the employers and th steamship company submitted their balance sheets for the three years to the union's auditor.

An investigation of the company's financial standing, by the union, re sulted in the findings that the raises demanded could not be paid, and the men returned to work with the assurance that when the profits incrased their wages would go up cor-

Surely, a better way of solving he labor question could hardly be found than this get-together spirit, one of the benefits of four years of war. It calls for the squarest sort of dealing between employer and employee, its effect is not only to give the producing worker a voice in the business, but it also raises in his breast a greater personal interest in the business.

The national war labor board in known, deceased wife or widow this country has been accomplishing in the year and a half of its existence what the meeting between the steamship company and its employees was able to accomplish.

It has settled hundreds of disputes between employers and employees where the interests of both clashed. It has forced both to deal openly and above board toward each other. The result of its work has manifested itself in the remarkable production of war materials for this countr yand our allies

The war is over. But we will have need of this square policy in industry, for which the national war labor board stands, in this period of hazardous reconstruction.

The war has wrought new ideas in the minds of men. It has placed at the disposal of governments new means of creating real democracy. The war labor board is one

If we are to continue on the road to make the world, including this country, safe for democracy, let us continue the work of the national war labor board.—Omaha News.
