A little further time devoted to diversions and then it being quite late, the instructors wended their way homeward, declaring they had spent a delightful evening.

RECEIVED AN INTERESTING LETTER

From Friday's Daily.

Floy Moore, the operator at Oreadopolis, is just in receipt of a letter from his brother Blair Moore, who is stationed now at Quint, Germany, with the American Expeditionary Force, with the army of occupation in which he tells of a visit to Paris, on a week's furlough. He visited the city, and saw many wonderful sights while there. He visited the room in which the peace conference is being held, and placed his hand on the table around which the peace delegates sit, and on which the treaty will in all probabilities be signed, as many have been signed upon the same table. Some of the treaties made in Napoleon's time were signed upon this historic piece of furniture. The most wonderful thing which he saw writes Blair Moore, was a picture of the "World's War," which was begun in 1914, and on which nineteen artists have worked upon it. There are twenty thousand people on it life size with a spread of canvass of three hundred and seventy-five feet in length and thirty-five feet in height. This he says is the most wonderful thing which he witnessed in the city, although he saw many things there which challenged his admiration.

LEAGUE FOR PEACE IS NOW
SURE TO COME

EVEN SENATORIAL OPPONENTS ARE READY TO CONCEDE IT.

SENTIMENT IS GROWING DAILY

Task That Will Follow for This Country Now Being Considered—Armenia Likely to Become Our Protege.

Washington, April 2.—That there is going to be a league of nations to enforce peace, and that the United States is to be a member of it is now generally conceded among public men who are criticizing provisions of the covenant endorsed by President Wilson. The covenant will be modified by the allied council in Paris to include some, if not all, of the amendments proposed by the opposition, which appears to have been given by former Senator Root a form most acceptable to the American delegation at the peace conference. It is not unlikely that any shortcomings of the modification affected in Paris will be met in the senate by resolutions qualifying ratification by the United States so as to preserve American rights and interests. With the prospect of the creation of a league of some sort generally accepted, interest is beginning to center upon the part the United States will play in the society of nations and the effect of the operations of the league upon vital interests of the American republic.

It is already foreseen that the United States will be requested by the league to become the mandatory for the new republic of Armenia. It is not clear whether the assumption of such an obligation would be obligatory, and many critics of the covenant are urging that it should be optional.

Cannot Shift Responsibility. President Wilson, however, during his recent visit to the United States clearly indicated that the allied program calls for an American mandatory for Armenia. The president's supporters contend that the United States cannot justifiably refuse to do its part, whatever the cost, in the work of preserving world peace and protecting and assisting the small peoples created by the break up of the empires of the German alliance. The opposition holds that the United States should stick to this hemisphere and let the eastern hemisphere care for its own.

As mandatory for Armenia the United States would have a job of no mean proportions. The Armenians claim a territory extending about 1,000 miles from east to west and about 400 miles from north to south with access to the Mediterranean, Black and Caspian seas.

In none of the provinces of this territory are the Armenians in the majority, the Turks and Kurds predominating generally. To protect the Armenians and develop a government lodged in their hands will require statesmanship of a high order, an administrative system operated at first by a large contingent of Americans and military and naval forces of size that would be determined by circumstances.

Senator Cummins estimated that an army of 100,000 men would be required for any American police duty in the near east. This question will have an important bearing upon the evolution of a permanent military policy by the next congress. At the rate of enlistment for service in France at present it is evident that an army of 100,000 men for Armenia scarcely could be procured by the volunteer system.
