Why Armour Cannot Fix Meat Prices

I^T is generally known that the livestock supply varies from day to day, and that prices fluctuate in consequence. It is not so generally understood that the retail demand for fresh meat varies tremendously also, and that, in consequence, the price obtained by Armour and Company fluctuates, too.

When fresh meat is finished at the plants it is shipped to Armour branch houses located in more than 400 centers of consumption. And, this meat is shipped unsold. The branch house manager receives with it a memorandum of what it cost to produce the meat. It is a simple matter then for him to determine what he must seek to get for it if he is to show a profit. And, he must sell it in the open market, in direct competition with other packers' branch houses, local abattoirs, and so forth. Also, he must face the uncertainties of weather, heavy receipts of fish and fowl and, of the mexpected and dausual circumstances.

Under the heading of '.nusual circumstances" for instance, would come the recent epidemic of Spanish Influenza. Statistics gathered by Armour and Company show th: While the epidemic was at its height fresh meat purchases the country over fell off no less than 25 per cent.

A sudden wave of intense heat; a severe blizzard which blocks roads and makes transportation difficult; heavy receipts of tish or game; localkilled meats coming on the markets in small communities -all or any of these factors have a marked effect on the demand for fresh meats.

Branch house managers must-because storage facilities demand it-dispose of their stock each week so far as possible. This often necessitates selling below cost.

Thus, if statistics be consulted, it will be found that the selling price of Armour and Company's fresh meats parallels the price of livestock and is constantly further affected by the conditions mentioned.

With these facts in view, fairminded readers must comprehend that it is not possible for Armour and Company to fix the price of meats.
