Store Burglarized.

Some time about midnight on Tuesday, the store of Wm. Puls was entered by the prying up of an outside grate which covers a coal chute leading to the cellar, and after this was done the burglars had easy sailing, and gained the store room by the steps leading to the cellar from the inside. After pilfering the cash register, and putting it most out of commission by their not knowing just how to open it they helped themselves to the contents amounting to about ten dollars in cash, from there they went through the partition door leading into the Alfred Gansemer store where they repeated their operation on the cash register and secured some fifteen dollars in cash and a check amounting to thirty some dollars and becoming alarmed they then abandoned their work, as they seemed to have taken no articles of merchandise from either place. The robbery was discovered upon opening the store Wednesday morning and Sheriff Quinton immediately notified, who arrived in a short time and as much evidence collected as possible, and in the meantime the Beatrice bloodhounds were telephoned for and expected to arrive about noon. From all appearances the robbery was the work of home talent, and upon this theory the officer set to work, and shortly placed under arrest a young man who has been employed on the dray wagon of D. C. Rhoden, and who also had recently served a term in the county jail for a similar offense, and a clue leading up to his being held was an iron bar which was found in the room where he slept, and upon comparing the size of this bar it just fitting the dent in the wood where the grate was pried up to allow their entrance.

Missouri Murderers Get Away.

Now that the bird has flown, there is some exciting talk of how he might have been caught, but in this case it was three birds instead of one, and to say they were bad men does not express it, as the three men who murdered a sheriff, his deputy and came near ending the third at a town in Missouri a few days ago, were lurking in the vicinity of Murray one day last week, having abandoned their car which was broken down near the farm home of Arthur Hansen, they set out on foot and at about seven o'clock in the morning called at the home of Mrs. Myra McDonald and requested this lady to prepare breakfast for them, which she did, and after partaking of the meal they departed, taking a course through the woods and about noon hour again appeared at the home of Rex Young which is but two miles north of Mrs. McDonald's, and finding Mr. Young at work in his feed yard they approached him, asking if he owned the place. Rex asked them why they wanted to know, and they tried to hire him to take them on to Fort Crook where they might catch the interurban into Omaha but requested he miss Plattsmouth on the way. Rex began to feel a little curious and half refused but they gave him to understand they might insist, but after some few minutes conversation Mr. Young promised he would call up the Puls garage in Murray and see if they could send a car for them. This he did and received reply that the car would be at the main road for them in a few minutes. They then departed and waited at the point until Fred Hill the driver of the Puls car arrived, and they immediately instructed Mr. Hill to drive them to their destination, and do it quick and according to their instruction. Mr. Hill drove them to Fort Crook, where all trace of the fugitives was lost, but at that was glad to get rid of his passengers.

Dr. Jake Brendel departed for Lincoln Tuesday where he will be in attendance at the State Medical meet which convenes at that place on Wednesday. The doctor expects to meet with many of his old class mates whom he has not seen for eighteen years, and besides enjoying seeing these old friends he will also hear some very able addresses, in medicines by the most capable physicians in the country. He was also accompanied by Mrs. Brendel and son Richard who will visit with her parents while in the capital city.

THE STORY

When Dick Arlington married, it was with the utmost misgiving. His wife was the daughter of the farmer for whom he worked, under an assumed name. Dick finally decided to tell Margaret that he was a fugitive, accused of the murder of his rich aunt. With perfect faith in him, Margaret set out with Dick to return to the city where the crime was committed, and though Dick did not look for any help from his ardent wife, it was she who finally solved the mystery which had puzzled the police for nearly a year. For Tracy, Dick's lawyer and confidant, who had advised him to run away in the first place, was inveigled by his sudden infatuation for Dick's wife into a full confession of the crime.

Then it was Dick's turn to doubt his wife, for Dick had been doubting some one all through the picture. First it was the strange secretary that his uncle had hired, and whom he suspected of the crime. The secretary had now turned out to be a noted detective. Then it was Tracy, in whom he had put the most implicit confidence. He had turned out to be the actual murderer. And now it was his wife. How could she have fooled him so grievously?

"It was a plant, old top," said the secretary. "She did just exactly as I told her to do and that was the only way we ever could have gotten that fox-faced lawyer to confess." And for the first time in a year, Dick's mind was free from any suspicion.
