A Good Hog House Costs You Nothing

THAT doesn't mean that you don't have to pay out a little money to build one. We aren't giving hog houses away. But we wanted you to be sure to read the next paragraph.

An agricultural expert at the Nebraska station said a short time ago that a farmer could pay for a good hog house out of the feed he saved in one winter. It wasn't a guess. The statement was made as a result of experience on the part of farmers.

And that is really only half the story. It doesn't take into account that a good hog house means more pigs per litter—and two litters a year instead of one.

Here is a real investment. A building that more than pays for itself in one year and then goes right on making money for you.

But it must be a good hog house—weatherproof, warm, dry and sunny. And for such a house White Pine is the most economical for outside uses because it does not warp, split, twist or rot. It's easy to work and easy to take. It costs a little more, but is cheapest in the long run.

Practical working plans, specifications and bill of materials for the above hog house or any other type of farm building are yours for the asking.

WOMEN USURPED THE RIGHTS OF MEN

And Were Anxious to Retain Them Until Abe Jones Showed Them the Folly of Their Ways.

From Wednesday's Daily. There's no telling how far-reaching the effects of the war may really be. Every American soldier will enjoy the new Emerson-Louis comedy production, "Oh, You Women," now being shown at the Parmele. The theme of the comedy deals with the efforts of the returning troops to regain their jobs which have been preempted by women in their absence at the front. In the ultimate end one among their number, Abe Jones, back from France a hero, succeeds in showing the women of his town their rightful place, although not until he has declared war on a female political ring and denounced men assuming such tasks as knitting and tending the babies. The authors have treated the story with discrimination and the satire is keen as a dagger blade. The picture was seen by a goodly number last night, and will be shown twice tonight at the Parmele, thereby concluding its two day engagement here.
