THE STORY

The Parcots—father, mother, and two charming daughters—live in Southern California. At the time the action begins, Stephen Parcot, the father, is in the Far North pursuing his avocation as an explorer. Mrs. Parcot has hurried overseas to Belgium to bring back one daughter who had been placed in a convent there. Dinny Parcot (the lead in the picture, played by Blanche Sweet, who also appears as the other sister in several parts of the production) is alone in the beautiful Parcot home. She receives a letter from her loved ones abroad—a letter that almost sends her reason tottering from its throne—a letter that tells her that invading soldiers have committed against both her mother and her sister "the unpardonable sin."

The letter has been one last note of explanation—and a plea that mother and sister be forgotten, a cry that their disgrace be shielded from the world.

With the letter carefully hidden in a wallet, Dinny, half crazed with grief and not figuring the difficulties of the task she has set for herself, sets out to find her loved ones.

Her train is delayed just outside a little town in the middle west. A chance traveling acquaintance offers aid and, later as Dinny and her acquaintance are walking thru a shaded street in the little village just at dusk, the acquaintance, smitten by Dinny's beauty, attempts to force his attentions upon her. Dinny collapses; her reason flees. Only a zephyr of the breath of life remains! Weeks later she recovers her strength, both mental and physical, to find that she has been nursed in the home of the Windsor.

Noll Windsor, an undergraduate at the college in the little town, has learned to love Dinny. She tells him her story—and torn between the fear of all men and the thought that she may waver from her path of chosen duty, leaves the home without announcement, to continue on her journey.

Soon after, young Windsor answers his government's call to serve with Hoover's Belgian relief commission in the devastated country. He arrives in Washington to secure his passports and discovers Dinny, who has been in the capitol city for some time, unable to continue her journey for the reason that the government has discontinued the issuance of passports to "unmarried" women. Noll and Dinny effect a marriage of convenience, Dinny's passports being securable in no other way.

Upon their arrival in Belgium, Noll, husband in name only, finds it possible to do much to aid Dinny in her search for her people. Together they travel the devastated regions, even penetrating the enemy country—for in those days the United States had not entered the war. A veritable pawn of Fate, it is Dinny's misfortune to encounter the very beast who had ravished her sister. When he sees the fresh young girl from California, Colonel Klemm mistakes her for the sister whom he has so shamefully treated in Belgium. He is mystified—and
