1920 ushers in national prohibition, with liquor, liquor everywhere and not a drop to drink.

The small boy with a sled on a good slippery hill doesn't see why there should be any complaint whatever about the transportation problem.

Thrift, like poetry and music, seems to be a gift just now, rather than an accomplishment, and not much more popular than poetry and music, either.

Of course the bolsheviks are very brilliant people, but with prices five times as high in Russia as in this country brilliancy is too much of a luxury there.

Premier Clemenceau in an address to his constituents, advised them to pay taxes and have children. If taxes in France are anything like they are here the French families will have difficulty in doing both.

Emma Goldman said just before the boat sailed that the United States had signed its death warrant. We never worry over what Emma says and, besides, if we had signed it it would be with strong reservations.

The allies owe us $450,000,000 in interest on the other $10,000,000,000 they owe us, but we're not going to collect even the interest at present. For two reasons, first, we're sorry for them, and second, they haven't got it.

Victor Berger's election to congress is to be contested by his opponent. Wouldn't it be a better recognition of Milwaukee's peculiar claim to distinction to just let the seat remain empty — like Milwaukee's Americanism?

References to the mean average temperature of December in weather bureau's review will not be understood. The temperature undoubtedly was mean but the general impression is it was not average for December.

Nicolai Lenin has said that in every group of 100 so-called bolsheviks there are one real bolshevik, 39 criminals and 60 fools. Thus the conservative criminals, who would naturally be inclined to let the world roll along peacefully, find themselves blocked by a majority of sixty-one.

Fifteen presidents, more than half of the list, served in war: George Washington, revolutionary; James Monroe, revolutionary; Andrew Jackson, revolutionary and 1812; Franklin Pierce, Mexican; William Henry Harrison, 1812; John Tyler, 1812; Zachary Taylor, 1812 and Mexican; Abraham Lincoln, Blackhawk; Andrew Johnson, civil; U. S. Grant, Mexican and civil; Rutherford B. Hayes, civil; James A. Garfield, civil; Benjamin Harrison, civil; William McKinley, civil; Theodore Roosevelt, Spanish.

There'll be fewer "busted" resolutions in 1920.

The motto of the reds: No peace on earth. Good will to none.

The once vociferous dollar is now a poor shinking little thing.

A few men are homeless and many are home less than they ought to be.

Another war in the Balkans is predicted. Apparently the Balkans balk at nothing.

It is perfectly all right to turn over a new leaf, but it is well to remember the lesson of the one before.

Life for a magazine reader these days, observes E. B. G., is just one darned "Continued on page 110" after another.

That Chicago man who "has $900 and wants a wife" evidently expects her to bring along her own clothes and groceries.

So long as we must purchase food and pay the water rent, and stand for being gouged galore, how CAN we be content?

Don't you ever wonder whether England's famed long parliament approached the record of 13,000,000 words, attained by the late special session of congress?

Hindenburg protests that he will not desert "his old comrade Ludendorff." We quite share his feeling that two such pals should hang together.

People who figure out how a small income may be made to support a large family generally know a great deal more about arithmetic than they do about human nature.

THE FARMERS' ATTITUDE

"We don't want any book-farmer or fresh young city guy whose socks match his tie and who has taken a short course in agriculture to come and tell us how to farm."

The man who made this speech at the convention of the Nebraska Farm Congress in Omaha the other day stands unnamed. His name is not given out in the chronicling of the battle of the farmers against some of the teachers sent out to educate them. But in a few words he set forth the position of many members of our great producing population with exceptional clearness.

Book-farmers they have no time for. It is a little difficult for a Nebraska farmer of the type that has had his shoulder to the wheel of production since the childhood days of the state and to whom is due the credit of boosting that state well up toward the pinnacle of agricultural supremacy to understand how it is that he is expected suddenly to harken to and heed some young chap in whose pocket rests a sheepskin, the signatures on which are not yet dry, and in whose imagination there is a supernatural pressure of chemical formula and the Helene titular classification of a number of geni, ordines and classes which the farmer has been accustomed to get along very well by calling manure and bugs.

It is an interesting subject for conjecture as to just how a young man, recently graduated from the finance department of any university would be accepted if he were to enter the office of any bank president in the United States and authoritatively proceed to advise that dignity of ways and means how to better his banking methods. It does not take a tremendously keen imagination to conjure up the scene that would follow the entrance of a graduate of any of our business colleges into the offices of the Brandeis stores with the intent to install newer policies of business administration. If bankers and business men and doctors and lawyers who have established their reputation and attained their proficiency were to be suddenly informed that bureaus composed of young graduates in their businesses and professions were to be established by a commiserating public who wished to lift them out of their pitiful status, there is some reason to suspect that the bureau might receive a treatment which would not quite be described as courteous.

The farmer is the best of citizens. He has a keen realization of the simple but very pertinent philosophy that "He who will not work may not eat," and he is practically carrying out his theory as best he can. He doesn't attempt to tell the banker how to bank, the merchant how to buy or sell, the lawyer how to plead or the doctor how to cure. He doesn't do this because he is big enough to realize that he doesn't know how to do it. The mark of a really big man is his ability to confine his teachings to his own line.

We wish the farmer well. We hope that his example of staying in the production game may be imitated by other classes. While society may teach the farmer something, the farmer has something to teach society as well.

And with all this, said by way of explanation of the farmer's frame of mind, and in justice to his most ancient and honorable calling, the fact remains that science has much to teach the farmer; much to tell him, greatly to his profit, that he has been too busy to learn. It is just as desirable for him as for the physician, the lawyer, the engineer, the merchant, to keep abreast of the times, and particularly to be informed of the discoveries and improvement that will help him to save labor, eliminate waste, combat the agencies of destruction, and become a more efficient craftsman. His opportunities for doing this have not, heretofore, been of the best. But they have been, and are, rapidly improving, and it is due to such institutions as the University of Nebraska, for example, to say that they have been among the instruments of his progress. State universities should be. They are supported largely by the farmers' money and if they can afford him a direct as well as an indirect return for the taxes he pays the more truly they fulfill their mission.

The farmer relishes officiousness and bumptiousness no more than the rest of us. He properly resents being talked down to. But he will not resent, approached in the right way and the right spirit, any more than any other sane man would resent, being competently advised how to do better work with the same effort and make more money.—World-Herald.

The Best Cough Medicine

When a druggist finds that his customers all speak well of a certain preparation, he forms a good opinion of it and when in need of such a medicine is almost certain to use it himself and in his family. This is why so many druggists use and recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. J. B. Jones, a well known druggist of Cubrun, Ky., says, "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in my family for the past seven years, and have found it to be the best cough medicine I have ever known."

New System Adapted!

The steadily increasing cost of all kinds of merchandise, shortening of terms and discounts by jobbers and manufacturers and advance in overhead expenses, compels me to readjust my terms of credit, and by so doing think I can serve my trade better and sell cheaper. Therefore beginning January 1st my terms will be 30 days. Those desiring longer time can secure the same by paying 8% per annum.
