A considerable portion of the time was spent in Yellowstone park where they saw many interesting sights. Mr. Tool says it is well worth ones time and the expense just to see the lavishness of nature's creative forces at work and Mrs. Tool also confesses to being somewhat in love with the west as a recreation spot.

Making Improvements

The Murdock public school building and the former Methodist church which was transformed into an improved school building last year in order to accommodate the pupils of the consolidated district, are now undergoing quite extensive repair to fit them for the opening of the school term in the near future. It is greatly to be regretted that funds could not have been voted for the erection of a new modern school building at the time it was up before the voters early last spring.

MERCHANT TELLS OF A REMARKABLE CASE

Writing from Maxeys, Ga., A. J. Gillen, proprietor of a large department store at that place, says: "I have a customer here who was in bed for three years and did not go to a meal at any time. She had five physicians and they gave her up. One bottle of Tanlac got her up, on the second bottle she commenced keeping house and on the third she did all the cooking and housework for a family of eight."

This sounds rather incredible, but it comes unsolicited from a highly creditable source and is copied verbatim from the letter.

Tanlac is sold in Plattsmouth by F. G. Fricke and Company, in Murray by the Murray Drug company, and the leading druggist in every town.

IS GOING THE WAY OF DODGE AND OTHERS

CAMP FUNSTON TO BE TORN TO PIECES—SALE OF THE BAR-RACKS IS GOING ON.

Camp Funston, Kan., Aug. 18—The one thing monumental to the memory of "Fighting" Fred Funston is in the hands of wreckers. Had the spirit of the "little fighting general of Kansas" hovering over the camp the lines of that tenacious chin must have tightened and a cynical smile spread across those grizzled features. A crowd of shouting, sweating, clamoring humans, whose commercialism overshadowed any possible sentiment fought the battle of dollars for permission to destroy the one monument to his memory in the Sunflower state—his state.

Inside the Funston theater on the zone, men of all types, from the thrifty, avaricious-eyed junk man to the pompous, corpulent wreckage supervisor, stripped off their collars and coats, plunged into the auction pit, all eager to do their bit in destruction.

The monotone mutterings of the auctioneer reminded one of a huge blue bottle fly on a hot summer day. They were answered by sharp, snapping barks of eager bidders, as under the proddings of assistants they then, with discretion, bid until discretion tossed in the sponge.

From 10 o'clock Tuesday morning until late afternoon the auctioneer, his collar wilted, his voice hoarse and his arms tired, stomped up and down the platform urging, begging, pleading and entreating for "more money." The audience of wreckers would remain silent, then the fist of the auctioneer would bang down, disdainfully, as he turned the purchase over to the buyer.

Then it would start all over again. The same scene, same principals and same actors, as tho the tableau had been rearranged. The same voices did the bidding in practically every instant. They came from groups of men gathered on opposite sides of the theater. They were the "big fellows" and dealt in large sums. Now and then a voice would interpose from somewhere in the crowd. A bid would be made rather timidly and the "big fellows" would cross-fire with bids that smothered and sometimes astounded the bidder on the sidelines.

It was quite a transition to these tensa of 1917, when the streets were thrbbing with the stamp of hob-nailed shoes and some 90,000 men were working as one—constructing. Now they were supplanted by a mere handful, whose objective was directly opposite.

Those somber, drab structures, whose attractiveness lives only in memories will be razed and hauled away. The rock-studded foundations will remain as silent reminders of the Camp Funston of war time, the monument to the "little fighting Kansas general." There are memories of parents who sent sons here, who never returned.

There must be a ghost army marching up and down these streets, thru the streets named for their buddies who didn't return. They'll stand final "farewell" tonight, maybe behind "the little fighting general" himself. "Taps" has been sounded for Camp Funston and the silent army will probably linger till the last notes die away.

TRAINING CENTER FOR THE EX-SERVICE MEN

Washington, Aug. 19—The question of converting Camp Sherman or some other army cantonment into a vocational training center for former service men also was discussed at length at today's cabinet meeting.

It was said that several cabinet members argued that the government now was conducting its rehabilitation work at a disadvantage because of a lack of co-ordination and that the result could be much more easily obtained at a central training station.

The government's information is that between one hundred and fifty thousand and two hundred thousand men will need training of this sort and it was said that when Camp Sherman was tried out and the plan found successful, a half dozen other large training establishments of a similar nature might be put into operation in other parts of the country.
