HOUSEWIVES' LIVES ARE JEOPARDIZED

Use of Inflammable Cleaning Fluids in the Home Cause Many Fires, Says Sandin

Calling attention to the dangerous condition that has arisen from the wide sale of inflammable cleaning liquids, Fire Chief Dr. O. Sandin today cautioned the housewives of Plattsmouth to exercise the greatest care in purchasing such cleaners and issued a warning to local druggists and others against selling such hazardous compounds.

"Reports that I have received," said Chief Sandin, "indicate that many drug stores are putting solutions of carbon bi-sulphide, which they offer to the public as safe preparations for the removal of spots and stains from clothing and other materials, although this chemical is more explosive than gasoline because of its greater volatility. Its vapor will ignite at comparatively low temperatures without either spark or flame being present. The heat of a steam pipe, for example, is sufficient

"As a matter of fact, carbon bi-sulphide is classified as the most hazardous of inflammable liquids. It is so apparent that its promiscuous sale for home cleaning purposes is likely to result in loss of life, particularly among women and children. In some instances, the carbon bi-sulphide is combined with ether which makes it still more deadly.

"The efficiency of gasoline as a solvent has made its use in home cleaning an every day occurrence, which, unfortunately, is often attended by injury and loss of life.

"Not long ago, a Massachusetts woman started cleaning a silk waist in a bowl of gasoline and when she rubbed the silk between her hands the friction produced a spark which ignited the gasoline fumes and caused an explosion that fatally burned the woman and wrecked her home.

More often the cause of ignition is a match, a lighted stove, or other open flame. There was a California woman, for example, who began cleaning a pair of gloves with gasoline in her kitchen, while a nearby gas stove was lighted. The vapor flashed across the intervening space and she lived just twenty minutes afterward.

"Gasoline vapor is heavier than air and accumulates close to the floor, where it awaits the inevitable spark. The vapor from one gallon of gasoline, when properly mixed with air, has an explosive power equal to that of eighty-three pounds of dynamite, and the fumes upon ignition have been known to flash a distance of 100 feet. This will give some idea of the danger involved. It is less hazardous to use gasoline in the open air than indoors, but it is better to banish it from the premises

Chief Sandin went on to say that the fire hazards of cleaning fluid differ considerably, and buyers should ascertain if they have been examined and passed upon by the Underwriters' Laboratories. Cleaning preparations consisting wholly of carbon tetrachloride are safe from a fire standpoint, and are actually valuable in extinguishing small fires in confined spaces.
