You can't keep a good man down or a bad one up.

Divers who try to beat trains are jumping at conclusions.

Looks like the world will be destroyed by the price of fire.

When your skirt comes back with buttons gone—there's the rub.

Hush, little business, don't cry, you'll be bigger—buy and buy.

Men have strong will power, women have stronger won't power.

Coffee is unhealthy. A man has killed his wife with a percolator.

Have you noticed the increase in beauty contests since women vote?

Fewer movies are being made. But not from the lack of raw material.

Hens cackle after laying eggs because they know the price we pay.

That man who inherited three mattress factories fell into something pretty soft.

A rolling stone gathers no moss; but a man who keeps his nose too close to it does.

Don't censure a man for leaving during church until you learn if he walks in his sleep.

Just when China's outlook was bright a missionary sails for there with a motorcycle.

The man who says saccharine is the sweetest thing known never slept until 10 a. m.

Twenty St. Louis society girls have gone wild goose hunting. Our girls hunt them at home.

Benjamin Franklin got his start as a writer knocking the styles we claim we want back.

Occasionally you see a woman with a face so hard that the rouge she wears looks like rust.

A diplomat who is willing to be seen and not heard is not only a good diplomat but a prodigy.

A trade journal says, "Your honey will be worth more next year." Thanks, we will stick to her.

Films are being shown in 1,600 theaters in America and some one eats peanuts in the same number.

"How can a man keep his wife's hands out of his pockets?" asks a subscriber. You might try holding them tenderly, now and then, just like you used to before marriage.

Also, give her a little spending money once in a while, and don't growl about it.

The controversy over the question of what was responsible for Germany's defeat in the war has broken out afresh in the German press. Anyway, they are making some progress toward the truth over there. It is now admitted that Germany was defeated.

A Kentucky rooster named in honor of President Harding is an accomplished cigarette smoker. Well, they do say that Warren used to be one of the most accomplished poker players in Washington, and that he did not mind taking a drink occasionally, either. That rooster is true to form.

Don't you remember how you used to stand around watching the fellow with cigarette stains on his fingers, confident that he would soon drop dead? And also don't you remember the yarn that saturated embers in the bottom of a pipe, if placed on a cat's tongue, would cause instant death.

This interest business is a great thing. For illustration, somebody has figured out that if China had put a nickel in the bank when she first became a nation she would now have $1,734,245,692,237.34. But it is possible that China didn't have the nickel, and maybe there were no banks.

France's national debt will be equal to $64,000,000,000 by the end of the year. That means she is mortgaged to the extent of 64 per cent of her national wealth. Our national debt is less than a tenth of national wealth. We are six times better off than France. This is consolation when worrying about our "problems."

It must be awful to be too poor to need an operation.

Lift and the world will lift you. Lean and down you go.

Ex-Emperor Carl had better keep out of America until the New York writers' strike is settled.

Russia wants to pay her debts and be recognized; but who could recognize a debtless Russia?

Mohammedan Sunday comes on Friday, putting them two days ahead of us in their golf.

Harding is always coming new words. Someone gave him a "possum" and he calls it an opossum.

You can now buy three German marks for a cent. However, we have plenty of waste paper in this country.

The archbishop of Montreal vigorously denounces present styles in women's dress. We were inclined to admire his bravery until we recalled the fact that he is not a married man.

War will not cease until the causes are removed, and the causes are greed, selfishness, human ambition, and the desire for commercial supremacy. Scrapping battleships will not solve the problem. The greatest war in history has just been fought, and there was only one notable naval engagement.

Five times as many are killed and injured each year as die from natural causes, says the Aetna Life Insurance company. It says 23 are accidentally injured in the United States every minute. That's a total of 12,000,000 accidental injuries a year, meaning that one in every nine of us is the victim of our own or some one else's carelessness yearly.

Honestly, we would like to devote more space to Gerty Farrar's divorce suit against Lou Tellegen, and Fatty Arbuckle's trial for manslaughter, but so many interesting things are happening nowadays that we just can't do it. Anyway, the evidence in Fatty's case has already been aired, and as for Gerty and Lou, they are no doubt guilty of all the things they are saying about each other.

Roy Haynes, the new prohibition commissioner at Washington that he was not receiving sufficient credit for his efforts to enforce the Volstead act, so he hired himself a press agent named Cuneo, whose duty it was to exploit the achievements of Mr. Haynes. As a result, Mr. Haynes was so much in the limelight that it made Commissioner Blair, of the internal revenue department, exceedingly jealous, so he cut Cuneo's name from the payroll. Verily, Verily, prohibition enforcement is a great game if you don't weaken.

THEY ALSO OPPOSE WAR

Some cynical newspaper writer during the past weeks has asserted that the chief opposition to the disarmament program would come from munition, powder factories, steel manufacturers, and others engaged in producing the materials used in war, because of the money loss they would suffer by the establishment of peace among nations.

This sophistry was refuted in an address Friday night by Charles M. Schwab before the American Iron and Steel Institute at which Marshal Poch was present. In conclusion Mr. Schwab said:

"Nothing could contribute more to the ultimate and permanent prosperity and happiness of the world than the conclusion of agreements between the great nations of the world which eliminate war and the cause of war.

"And, so, let us say to the men

The hero of the next war will be the man who prevents it.

There is a destiny that shapes our end, tight-shoe them as we may.

"Nothing could contribute more to the ultimate and permanent prosperity and happiness of the world than the conclusion of agreements between the great nations of the world which eliminate war and the cause of war.

"And, so, let us say to the men gathered in Washington, let us go out from this gathering of men of the steel and iron industry, that we are solidly behind every effort they can make which will hasten the coming of the time when war shall be no more.

"If disarmament inflicts a money loss upon us, the American iron and steel industry will accept it willingly and gladly. We will do so not in a spirit of mere idealism and self-sacrifice, but in the belief that the greatest permanent, material prosperity would be brought about by the concentration of the energies of mankind upon constructive activities; upon means for well-being, and not for the destruction of civilization."

Great manufacturers like the Schwabs and Du Ponts have never relled for their prosperity on one form of industry. Furthermore, they have shown in many ways that they are just as patriotic and peace-loving as any other class of citizens, and the sentiment expressed in Mr. Schwab's address will find an echo in the mind of every American manufacturer whose products have heretofore been devoted to the use of war.

SUCCESS AND CLOTHES

Perhaps you can't afford expensive clothes. But you can afford clean ones. You know, you say, that your clothes are not part of you.

But other people don't. They look at you in the clothes you wear.

They picture you, when they think of you afterward, in those clothes. If the clothes are slovenly, they consider you slovenly.

If the clothes are smart, they consider you smart "the goods."

Henry Ford, Thomas Edison and a few other celebrities are not particular about their clothes.

But those men are made. If they had their lives to live over again, in these modern times, they would probably take a different view.

If you look prosperous, people are likely to think you are prosperous. If you dress like a failure, they will consider you a failure, and failures get few chances.

Clothes, of course, are not everything, but they are a great deal. It is not the coat that makes the man, but it is the coat that gets the man his charge.

By and by, when you have "arrived" you may be able to indulge a taste for dressing.

But you can't at the start. Dress inexpensively if you like, but in good taste. Avoid shabbiness and avoid flashiness at the same time.

The man with the loud checks and the glass jewelry is just as repellent as the man with dandruff on his coat collar.

People dress better and better, in appearance at least, as the years go by.

You must look clean and prosperous if you want to impress people. And if you don't impress people you will never get anywhere.

The binding doesn't make the book, but an attractive cover will help sell it.

THE FAILURE OF THE TREATY

It is a truism to say that "the failure of the Versailles conference" is but a phrase. While there is no definite means of causing everyone to agree that such conference is a success or that it is a failure, the fact remains that the provisions of the Versailles treaty are in active operation and that document is the charter of the new European order.

From the standpoint of J. M. Keynes, an economist, the peace conference failed. In the mind of Bernard Baruch, another economist, it was a success. Similarly, one set of statesmen have faith in it; another set aversion to it. Poland, Yugo-Slavia and all other countries liberated under the Versailles and subsidiary treaties esteem it their badge of liberty. Germany and Austria look upon it as their certificate of military defeat.

And so it goes.

There is no doubt that many sections of the Treaty are subject to valid and cogent criticism. It is an imperfect document. But it is serving an indispensable function in a thousand ways, of which the collection of reparations is a striking example. The Treaty in the end, like one of its writers, must play for the approval of posterity.

Until the machinery of the treaty breaks down, until it no longer continues to do what it purports to do, however, it should be borne in mind that "the failure of the Versailles treaty" is not a translation of facts into words, but a phrase which was originated by captions and partisan critics and has crept insidiously into general currency.

A MERCILESS JUDGE!

One Who Shows No Favor

A merciless judge is Father Time. Before him the weak and the wanting go to the wall. Only the truth can stand. For years the following statement from a Plattsmouth resident has withstood this sternest of all tests.

Theo. Starkjohan, retired farmer, Locust and 9th streets, Plattsmouth, says: "For several years Doan's Kidney Pills have been used in our family for kidney troubles and backache, and they have proven to be all that is claimed for them. Whenever my back feels a little lame and my kidneys are not acting as they should, I take Doan's Kidney Pills for a few days and they never fail to do me good. Doan's can't be equalled and anyone having kidney trouble should take them for they are very reliable." (Statement given February 23, 1916.)

OVER FOUR YEARS LATER, or on May 12, 1920, Mr. Starkjohan added: "The cure I had from Doan's Kidney Pills several years ago has been a lasting one. It has been a couple of years since I used or had need of a kidney medicine and my kidneys are now good and healthy. I still have faith in Doan's and if ever I should need a kidney remedy again, I should certainly use them."

GRANGE RECORDS PLACED ON FILE

Six Volumes Contain Much Nebraska History in the Early Days—Go to Historical Society

The original records of the applications and organization of the national grange in Nebraska, the applications being those signed by members of each grange in the state from the first application in 1872 thru the period of the granges' early growth up to 1879, are the latest contributions to be filed with the state historical society.

The records were sent from the national secretary at Washington, and Addison E. Sheldon, secretary of the society, announces that they are the first of the original records and history of Nebraska agricultural organizations which the society plans to develop into a complete history of all Nebraska farmers' organizations. The records are contained in six volumes and it is expected that the remainder will follow as those already received are copied. The society attaches unusual interest to these records because the applications all are in the original handwriting and member seeking charter, as well as the signatures, which Mr. Sheldon points out will be of untold value in following and locating the early settlers of Nebraska and those who were instigators of the grange as well as other organizations that followed.

Receipt of these volumes has caused the historical society to delve back into the early '70's and review the history of this organization, which, in that period, is described as the most powerful and influential of any of the early farmers' organizations.

Founded to Obtain Relief

The organization originally was founded to obtain agricultural relief through a system of organization. It also was planned as an educational and co-operative movement and contained a strong program of social activities. In fact, the records show the grange in that day usually was the social center of the neighborhood in many of Nebraska's counties, especially among those in the southeastern part of the state.

The organization did not adopt what might be styled a platform of objectives in that day usually was rather it is described as a slogan, and read something to this effect: "Get Rid of the Middleman and Buying Agencies." Many stores, elevators and small factories were purchased by the Nebraska grange in all parts of the state.

One of the greatest grange who experienced its greatest growth, practically all of these co-operative owned establishments went bankrupt, or were absorbed by private individuals who continued to operate them, many yet today.

During these hard times, during which credit was broken up, lack of good business judgment, the failure of co-operation between members and the advent of politics are attributed by observers of the grange as reasons for the near death of the organization.

The advent of politics spelled the temporary ruin of the Nebraska grange, early members of the order write the historical society. A. M. Walling of David City, declares in a paper contributed to the history being compiled, that politics ruined the grange, whereas had it remained an educational and social organization it would have prospered. George H. Simmons, one time secretary of the Nebraska grange, writes from Chicago that he has forgotten most of the history of its organization, but the fact that politics and a demoralized condition of finances brought its downfall. And so with other prominent members of the grange in its early day they all declare that politics and contributing factors ruined the organization.

Among the First Charters

Among the first granges to be chartered, as contained in volume 1 of the records, was that of Harlan county No. 1, January 11, 1872, with A. C. Robbins, master, and P. O. Ord, secretary. The charter contained seventeen names.

This much is told by the historical society of the grange's rapid rise and fall in Nebraska. The history also will show its present status and its indications for the future. P. O. Ord, statistics upon the growth of the organization show that in 1875, Nebraska had about 1,000 granges with a membership of 30,000 men and women. In 1895 it was comparatively extinct, from a standpoint of the 1875 figures. The membership revived again 1893 only to lose half its gain in 1894. The period from 1898 to 1907, shows a new spirit in growth banking back to where it was in 1877 only to drop again in 1908. Since that time steady advances are shown. The national membership in the organization today is near what it was in 1875, the year of its greatest membership—$58,000—according to official figures.

Paul H. Roberts and wife of Cedar Creek who were here to visit with relatives and friends for a short time departed this morning for Omaha where they will spend the day and where Mr. Roberts will attend the Shriner ceremonial.
