A DARK HORSE FOR PAPAL SUCCESSION

Successor to Pope Benedict Likely to be Man Not Now Prominent in the List.

Washington, Jan. 23.—Those who remember the struggle between the church and state in Italy after the fall of temporal power in 1870, commented today upon the fact that to express condolences on the death of Pope Benedict three cabinet ministers of the king of Italy have for the first time officially entered the Vatican.

One valiant form of protest against the occupation of Rome was the prohibiting of all Catholics to vote or to be elected to political or administrative offices, but finally the ban was raised by Pius X. Benedict XV amplified this decision and the "popular party" consisting of Catholics, was formed in the last election and gained 100 seats in parliament.

Benedict soon after the war, suppressed the important form of protest by the Vatican after 1870 by which no Catholic sovereign or ruler was to be elected to go to Rome as head of the kind of Italy under penalty of being excommunicated. President Loubet of France was the only ruler who disregarded the papal prohibition and Pius X, as a result, severed diplomatic relations with France. Benedict, however, abolished this protest. The only remaining form of tangible protest by the Vatican is that of the voluntary imprisonment of the pope in the apostolic palace. Improvements in the relations between the church and the state has been slow, and for this reason, some here believe Cardinal Mailli, archbishop of Pisa, who has on several occasions shown an ardent desire that a complete understanding should be reached between the church and the state, will probably not be elected pope.

Cardinals de Lai and Boggianna are regarded here as being too favorable to intensifying the ancient struggle and, therefore, are considered as improbable selections. The chances are also said to be against Cardinal Gasparri, because he has been papal secretary of state and against Cardinal Merry Del Val because he is not an Italian. It, therefore, is held here that the next pope perhaps will be one not prominently mentioned among the cardinals today.
