ONLY SURVIVOR OF THE PURITY LEAGUE

Omaha, Oct. 15.—"Oh, Purity, where is thy victory?" asked Edward Ranft, a University of Omaha student.
Ranft is the only surviving member of the "Purity League" formed last spring at the university as a fraternity for unblemished male undergraduates. There was only a dozen members, but they all fell by the wayside except Edward, who admits he isn't exactly adverse to kissing, but has stuck to the league's good resolutions more as a matter of pride than anything else.
"You see," he explained, "I haven't found the girl to kiss yet—and I do need a good teacher."
"We had twelve members last year, but graduations and these vamps almost killed the organization, and I'm the only one left. I don't go out with girls—much."
There were a number from Plattsmouth attending the University of Omaha last year and some this year, but so far as we know they are not members of this league.

BEER EXPORTS FALLING OFF

Prohibition Cutting Heavily Into German Trade—War Paralyzed Germany's Beer Export

Berlin, Sept. 26.—The world outside is drinking only about half the German beer it consumed before the war, and for this condition American prohibition is held to be largely responsible. During the first half of the present year only 279,000 hectoliters were exported, making an estimated export of 558,000 hectoliters for 1922, as compared with 1,129,000 annually in pre-war days. The latter amount was valued at 28,000,000 gold marks, while the value of beer sent abroad during this year is 509,000,000 paper marks.

The principal pre-war customers for Germany's brews, which made the word "stein" a common place in bars virtually all over the world, were Belgium, Switzerland, France, the United States, Great Britain and Austro-Hungary. The war paralyzed Germany's beer export almost completely. With the return of peace the industry's difficulties were not so much the recovery of lost markets, as the securing of raw materials, particularly barley. Even today the shortage of barley for domestic consumption is such that the breweries are not permitted to use the home-grown product for export beer. In securing the supply abroad they have turned mainly to the countries where the currency was relatively weak, but barley scarcity there has forced them to buy a good deal from America and Denmark.

EVILS OF THE OVER-DRAFT ARE OUTLINED

Purely an American Invention and Employed in Spite of Being in Violation of Law.

One of the most annoying things with which the banking business has to deal is the overdraft.

This is purely an American invention. In fact, the universal use of the check for paying obligations is an American device. In European countries only the select, well-to-do business men have the privilege of writing checks against their bank accounts. The banks there extend this privilege with the same care and caution that the banks here loan money to individuals.

Under the state law, when an overdraft occurs on the books of a bank both the individual who wrote the check and the bank which paid it, become liable to punishment and yet it is common occurrence and one of the most annoying things to contend with.

When an individual buys a dollar's worth of milk tickets, he wouldn't think of going for another quart of milk when his tickets were all gone, but seems to consider it all right to draw checks in the amount of $110, when but $100 is on deposit. Not only that, but when he receives a notice from the bank that his account is overdrawn, too often he gets madder than a wet hen about it.

The depression period thru which the banks have been groping their way during the past two years, has disclosed that very much of the grief has come about by reason of permitting overdrafts. For this reason it is being insisted that this practice be stopped and if it is possible that the day is at hand when the practice will go out of existence entirely. The ordinary American is a pretty liberal sort of a fellow and when he is made to see that the best interests of business in general demand that the danger which lurks in the overdraft be done away with, he accepts the situation and governs himself accordingly.—Charles Sinha, vice president of the Farmers and Merchants bank, Milligan, writing in the Lincoln State Journal.

Charles Boedeker of Murray was in the city today for a short time looking after some matters of business.
