Last year a college professor ran for governor of Kentucky on an anti-betting platform. He declared that in three years over $50,000,000 had been wagered on horse races in Kentucky and, while the Kentucky Jockey club had received $3,000,000 as its rake of the state of Kentucky had gathered less than $4,000 as taxes. He proposed to either stop the racing game or get a lot of money out of it for the state. The professor didn't even get enough support to give him a place on the ticket. Kentucky has its blooded horses and its lovely women and purposes to back them with its money. The present governor is reported as having said that if the state assembly adopted an act to forbid betting on races he might approve it, but the legislators are as likely to knock the game as the barbers are to endorse safety razors.

A MOUNTING COST

The federal treasury spent more last year for the care of sick and disabled veterans of the World War than for any other one purpose. It spent nearly $100,000,000 more than in the preceding years and the indication is that the peak has not yet been reached. That this services will cost more than a million and a half a day this year or next fall is well within the realm of probability.

From every source close to the veterans themselves there is expressed despite the heavy outlay the greatest dissatisfaction with what the government is doing. One of the veterans' organizations has mapped out a complete program which it will present to the next congress. That it will involve expense greatly in excess of anything yet undertaken may be taken for granted, leaving the inevitable bonus issue out of account entirely. The president has properly insisted that without regard to the merits of the case the federal treasury is in no position to undertake any such financial obligation as the bonus would involve. But while we talk about the bonus we are actually paying out a sum on account of the disabled which at the present rate of growth will within a few years have cost more than the bonus itself. Certainly we are becoming no more able to meet the general obligation, with the cost which must necessarily be incurred now but little less than half a billion a year, and still rapidly growing.

That is a phase of the situation that ought to appeal to the able bodied service men themselves. Their demand for gratuity in the face of the increasing costs for the incapacitated, and in addition to the compensation they have received, or will receive, from the individual states, is hardly consistent with the motives and ideals that drew them into government service in the first place.

The sick and disabled veterans richly deserve, and should receive as promptly as possible, the very best care that medical science can give them and the government should not be niggardly in making provisions for this treatment, but if a bonus is to be placed upon top of the cost of this, paid out indiscriminately to the ex-service men, regardless of whether or not they are able bodied, it will mean a financial slump from which they cannot recover for many years.

WEAKER SEX! HUH!

It has been a popular pastime in learned gatherings to severely criticize the modern system of education of women. According to recent remarks made by dignitaries of the financial and legal worlds, the training given to girls today quite robs them of their feminine heritage, without conferring genuine benefits in its place. One learns that woman approached the ideal along about the Victorian era, and she has been steadily slipping ever since. Presumably she has hit the bottom now with a crash.

One vast improvement that education has made in the female of the species for which we should all offer up a prayer of thankfulness, has been quite overlooked by the self appointed critics. This is the inculcating in them of a spirit of dislike for physical weakness and admiration of health, so that they no longer revel in the enumeration of their fatal ills.

In the days of our grandmothers no one was a real lady who had not acquired a fine assortment of illnesses during the course of a lifetime, and a visit of the doctor was a mark of distinction. Feminine gatherings were enlivened by disquisition on the part of the sufferers of every malady under the sun, and there was no incentive to overcome them when they made the victim so popular as a raconteur.

But modern education has promulgated the doctrine of a sound body in a sound mind, and those who are stricken exert themselves to overcome it. The lady who "enjoys poor health" is rapidly passing into the limbo of forgotten things. Widening woman's scope of vision by teaching her science and politics and similar subjects has had the beneficial result of turning her thoughts outward instead of in, and her conversation includes more enlivening topics than ill health.

It is really a form of egotism that leads people to inflict on others such conversation, inasmuch as they are actuated by a desire to bask in the limelight in one way or another.

If you have had every mortal malady from hookworm to household's knee you are, of course, slightly differentiated from the common herd who have enjoyed no such fine assortment of ills and as such worthy of the careful attention of all listeners. It is on this ground that the bores proceed and the educators who gave the ladies something else to think and talk about assuredly should be blessed as mankind's greatest benefactors.

"The man the democrats nominate for president," declares Mr. McAdoo, "should not be too radical or too conservative." Very good. But should he not also be the son-in-law of a former democratic president?

Just offhand we could name three men "that it does a world of good" to get up at 5 in the morning and rush to the golf course. It would, however, half kill any of 'em to roll out that early in the morning and do work on the lawn.
