THE LORD'S COMPASSION

He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. —Micah 7:19.

ODE TO OIL

Albert Fall had lots of gall.
Doheny lots of Jack;
Poor Denby's mind was all benign;
And Daugherty had tact.
And if the stew offends you sore,
And if you seeeth and boil—
Console yourself with this glad thought—
The government HAD oil.
Politically speaking, the wages of "Sin"clair is death.
Already you can hear the garden seeds stirring in the catalogues.
The Dark Ages have returned to Washington. They're boiling 'em in oil.
Our advice to all sensitive men in public life is to keep away even from oil stations.
If we ever do annex the North Pole, our history indicates that we'll freeze to it.
The wheat out in the western country is doing fine thus far. It has been killed only once.
They whiffed and they sniffed and they sniffed, but Mr. Bok didn't even tell 'em what's good for a cold.

The "sweetest" letters of Uncle Asa Candler indicate that he wasn't much of a success as a Romeo, but he was probably doing his best in spite of the handicap of years and waning passion.
"We cannot keep out of the world's affairs," says Dean Wigmore "for the simple reason that we are already in them." Some American publicists apparently have never thought of that.
Republicans and democrats in congress are each afraid that the other will get the credit for tax reductions. Neither need have any fear of being overwhelmed with gratitude for anything they have done thus far.
There ought to be a permanent government fund for the purchase of closed motor cars for people who eat onions and smoke two-for-fifteen cigars. Such persons have to get around some way, and it would be unfair to bar them from the street cars arbitrarily.
David Lloyd George has been unbelievably quiet of late. Asquith has done all of the talking for the Liberals, by whose grace the Socialists party is in power in Great Britain. It is something new for Lloyd George to let a colleague do his talking. We believe there is a trick in it. Watch David.

LINES TO REMEMBER

A feminist leader is revising a lot of ancient proverbs in which the women are given the worst of it. In her version, the men will get the worst of it. But we hope she will not tamper with the story of Eve and Adam and the apple. Any attempt to say that Adam persuaded Eve to eat the apple, or indeed that he ever persuaded her to do anything will be greeted only with laughter.

It was clearly the outstanding weakness of the act of 1920 that it made no provision for compulsory consolidation as did the British act terminating government operation at the close of the war. And when it is remembered that the period since the war has been generally unfavorable from the point of view of railroad operation it is not to be wondered at that the process of consolidation has thus far got nowhere. In fact, strong systems such as the New York Central or the Pennsylvania way to absorb weak lines in their territories solely because those lines were unable to stand on their own feet.
But with the compulsory consolidation feature, and with seven years in which to adjust themselves to it, it is not improbable that the strong lines would proceed to acquire the weak lines and in due time, if operating conditions are favorable and railroad credit is restored, to make them integral parts of their systems, with profit to themselves and advantage to the public. But four years of waiting, for the railroads themselves to take the initiative, indicates that little will be accomplished as long as the consolidation feature is merely voluntary. Provision for compulsory consolidation at the end of a reasonable period, five or seven years, seems to be necessary.

MAKING IT COMPULSORY

Although Senator Cummins has lost nominal leadership of the Interstate Commerce committee, legislation proposed by him to promote railroad consolidation is probably the most constructive measure that has thus far been proposed to unify American railroad transportation and to solve its financial problems. The new bill is in line with the consolidation clauses of the transportation act of 1920, but it places in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission authority which is withheld, and makes consolidation compulsory, if not voluntarily accepted at the end of seven years.
Seven years of grace should be sufficient to enable the railroads to consolidate themselves into great unified systems, and with such systems created, combining strong and weak lines it would be possible to create a rate structure that would pay railroad investors a fair return, while the economies of unified operation might at the same time permit of a reduction in transportation charges.
It was clearly the outstanding weakness of the act of 1920 that it made no provision for compulsory consolidation as did the British act terminating government operation at the close of the war. ONE-TENTH MORE

Judge Gary of the United States Steel corporation recently reported to the president that the eight hour day has increased the cost of steel production in the United States by approximately 10 per cent. He added, however, that improved methods of production would probably reduce the cost in the future, and absorb the higher cost chargeable to the shorter working day.
From the point of view of those who have long demanded the abolition of the twelve-hour day in the steel industry, the Gary statement is a pleasant surprise. The leaders of the industry urged for many years that labor in sufficient quantities was not available to permit the change, and if it were, the cost would be so high as to retard the industry's progress.
On the labor side, the transition was made practically without difficulty. A sufficient supply of labor was available to man the steel mills the last half of last year, during part of which time the steel industry was operating but little below its capacity. And now, although the price of steel and steel products has not yet been marked up it is said the additional cost does not exceed 10 percent, and that it should not be permanent.
If, however, the improvements which Judge Gary anticipates fail to develop, there will be little objection to a moderate price increase on account of the reform which has been effected. The American public has willingly paid the price of improved working conditions in most other industries. There will be no exception in the case of steel.
