Dual Lubrication

and other features of

OIL PULL

The Cheapest Farm Power

YOU want to be sure of several things when you select a tractor. One is lubrication. For without a protecting film of oil that never fails, parts wear quickly and power is wasted.

The OilPull is doubly protected by its system of Dual Lubrication. A pump, tested to work under 2000 pounds pressure, forces oil, drop by drop, to the vital bearings of the engine.

From these parts the surplus oil works down into the crank case. Here the connecting rods churn it into a heavy mist which completely envelops the interior of the engine. Other features of the OilPull which make possible its consistently delivered "10-Year-Service" are Triple Heat Control, Oil Cooling, etc.

Find out about this "proved" tractor that is growing more popular every year. We have complete information here and will gladly explain any points.

Plows Up Wheat.
August Kupke has some fifty acres of wheat which the fly has devastated, and which he was certain that would not make a crop worth the harvesting, and he concluded to put the land to corn, and with the assistance of Messrs. Will Strich, Emil and Harvey Heier and two teams from home he will till the fifty acres in corn last Wednesday. Roy Hemke was supplying the listers with seed corn and found it was nearly a man's job at that.

Max Dusterhoff Goes East.
Max Dusterhoff, who has been at Los Angeles for several months, and where he and Joe Wutchinek having been working at their trade of painting and decorating, arrived in Murdock last Wednesday for a short stop, while on his way to Springfield, Illinois, where he goes to accept a position as foreman in a painting establishment, and at which place he is assuming a very responsible position, and which commands very remunerative pay. Mr. Wutchinek for the present is remaining in the west but will not continue there longer than the position which he now has lasts; he will then come east again and probably go to Illinois.

Ivy McCrorey Recovering.
Ivy McCrorey has been having a very severe siege with the inflammatory rheumatism which has kept him to his home for the past four weeks. Ivy is at this time just able to be up and hobble about but not as yet able to get out and shake himself and get after the work, and when Ivy can not work he surely is not in his element, for he is a worker and no mistake. We are glad that he is able to be up, and hope soon that he may be in his usual health again.

Looks a Little Dangerous.
During the last week there has been a little hail here and there, and while it could not do damage to the growing crops that it will later, still it shows that there is a danger lurking in the clouds every time they assemble. Many seasons slip away without any damage resulting, but when it comes it is sure bad enough to make everyone wish they had an abundant insurance on their crops. While we are hoping that the hail in its destructive character may not come, still that does not save the crops.
