DRESSING UP

Fall is coming. One can feel it in the air these mornings, a dash of crispness that has been missing many weeks. It is reflected in a revival of spirits that have sagged under pressure of torpid mis-summer. Things are brightening up a bit; there are school books to buy and numerous little alterations such as are necessary at every change of Nature soon will don new garments. For slightly different reasons humans will do the same. Heavier clothes and more of them will be forthcoming with the first chilly day or two and after that appearances will be changed. To return to light and flimsy garments only with the coming of summer again next year.

It is a good change. New clothes make the people feel better and have more self respect. And then of course there is no better fun than buying them.
