BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

November 2

By M. S. Briggs

The Prodigal Son

This lesson is one which all men have used during the ages and which many different interpretations have been placed. This lesson is applicable to our time and all Bible lessons for humanity have not changed during the ages.

The same selfishness which actuated Adam also actuated the Kaiser. For this sin they both had to pay and they both pulled thousands times thousands down causing them also to suffer for their sins.

The Father and the Son question of the one and the loyalty and obedience of the other. The son inherits from the Father and in this case he demanded of the Father that portion of the substance which should fall to him which in this case was one-third which was to fall to him when the father should die if it was not due before.

But the father saw that when the son demanded this he would be of no more use at the home so he divided unto him his living. There were other things that were his share and when they gathered all there was good training. The teaching of honor, respect and obedience. Did the son get these. There are some people who hold that notwithstanding all the good counsel and care some boys will go wrong. But it always seems to me that there must be some fault also at the parents' door.

Sure the son sinned also. Almost immediately after getting his portion of the substance he converted it into money, left the home with its tender memories with its love where the mother was an uncrowned queen, a nurse, a sister and a companion, all in one, where the child, boy or girl, could go for sympathy, advice or anything within her power to give no matter what the sacrifice. There was father, dad, the old man or governor, he was father, uncle, pal, banker and one always to help and could always be relied upon. By the son taking his property and leaving he was going out into the world for himself. Had he gotten his share of what every home should give, instructions in the ways of life, he would not have spent his all in riotous living, but he did and it was soon gone. Nothing left, this young man, like many of our day, thought he would have a good time and he spent his money right and left. Everybody must join while the money lasted. Finally it was gone and as so often happens some other calamity came along. This time it was a crop failure. The young man was broke, the country was also in a bad condition. He was out of money and hungry.

Again in this instance he was a Jew and was among the Gentiles. He finally found a part of a job. He got a place with a hog raiser, a strange position for a Jew, but he was hungry and broke. He went to work and as he drove the hogs to their feed, and they tackled the locust pods, not a very good food, as the swine ate with evident satisfaction and relish, he thought: "What have I done. I had a good home, a loving mother and a kind father. He now has to hire someone to help run the farm. Maybe a stranger. Still, as I remember father was always kind to the hired help and furnished them a good home with plenty to eat." As he studied over the matter he thought, "How I would like to have that kind of a job and I believe father would give me a place to work and pay me wages. I know I have no cause to expect he will give me a place only his great love. Still I do not want to ask that he take me back only upon the condition that I work just like any other servant and I will go back and make good as I have wronged them all."

He puts his notion into action and immediately starts home, not to ask anything of the father except a chance to work and make good.

Well, how about things at home. The younger son had taken his portion and gone to a far country. The father and mother had married him when he went away and had looked out in the direction where he had disappeared and wondered how son is getting along. Is he working, has he the comforts of a home? Is he in good company. We hope so. Everyone coming at a distance is eagerly watched to see if our boy is coming home. Until finally someone comes over the hill along the road that leads to home. The intuition tells the father, who is watching, that the long lost boy is dead. The home folks were coming home. Joy lights up the face of father and mother and home they race down the road to meet our boy. The father, who has outrun mother and falling on the son's neck, kissed him which meant that all the past was forgiven and he was welcomed home again. The son true to his purpose, was beginning to say, "Father, I have sinned against you and my mother. I have dishonored you and I have no right to even be called your son." Here the father stopped him and said: Bring a robe and put on him, put shoes on his feet and a ring for his hand and a seal on it that he may be restored again to sonship. To the servant he said, Go bring the fattest calf and we will have a merry time, for our son who was dead to us is here again, and they made merry. So like is the Heavenly Father, rejoiced over one sinner that repenteth. All he asks is repentance, acknowledgment of sin, a turning around and serving Him which means carrying the glad tidings of salvation to the world.
