Nature's Way.

On the other hand, nature has a way of scarifying these "hard seed" which is just as effective as the manmade way, but is much slower. When these seeds fall to the graund they do not grow at once, but wil remain on the surface over winter when the action of freezing and thawing puts the seed in condition to absorb water, when the warm days come in the spring it will grow. This is the reason that often when we seed unscarified sweet clover we the second year we get a good stand This is often an advantage because in the second year we have some first year plants which live over to the next year and also have second year plants which will produce seed and die that year. In this way a more less permanent stand of sweet clover can be obtained. For spring found that the combination "has op- seeding insist on getting scarified
