A Dallas, Texas, man struck a match to see if he had any gas, so now he hasn't any car. That reminds us of the sheriff who took a man's car. He liked it very much. He had an attachment for it.

The press is unable to explain why Gen. Andrews has been unable to secure $50,000-a-year men to serve as volunteer prohibition officers. Possibly it is because men of this caliber prefer to buy their own booze.

AID SOUGHT FOR MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE
Lincoln, Sept. 9.—State aid for the construction of a bridge over the Missouri river at Niobrara, connecting the states of Nebraska and South Dakota at a new point, was asked by a committee for the K. N. D. Highway association who called on State Engineer Cochran at the Capitol Tuesday.

The estimated cost of the structure is several hundred thousand dollars to be divided among the two states and the neighboring counties and communities.

The K. N. D. (Kansas-Nebraska-Dakota) route is a North and South highway marked about two years ago. It enters Nebraska from the south at Superior, running north to Niobrara would take the place of a ferry now in operation.

State Engineer Cochran suggested that a Missouri river boundary line bridge would probably have to be provided for, through a special appropriation by the legislature, as no expenditure from the state aid bridge fund is contemplated by law for any structure that is not wholly within Nebraska.

Wants Hay Inspection in the Future

Federal Bureau Is Ready to Co-operate With State, But McLaughlin Lacks Authority to Help Pay

Cooperative inspection of hay at shipping points by the state and federal departments was discussed at a conference Monday forenoon in the office of Secretary H. J. McLaughlin of the Nebraska department of agriculture. In the absence of any specific state law authorizing hay inspection Secretary McLaughlin said his cooperation might not be of much benefit. He has the matter under consideration. He feels that the farmers and growers of hay are at the mercy of dealers who fix the price for them.

E. E. Parker, representing the hay standardization bureau of the federal government, was present stated that arrangements had been made for installing a federal licensed inspector at Kansas City. Federal inspection will start there September 1. Alfalfa hay is practically the only hay now shipped long distances. Consumers in Georgia, Florida and other southern states and Wisconsin and Iowa buy Nebraska hay. Producers can sell to them subject to federal inspection at Kansas City, and shipments can be recognized without loss in freight rates. Mr. Parker said he would like to install federal inspection at Omaha. All hay now shipped to Chicago is subject to federal inspection there. Licensed inspectors under federal and state cooperation are now installed in Denver, Ogden, Oklahoma City, and in the state of Texas.

Mr. Parker said states are falling into line when convinced that federal and state inspection means that the grower who raises a better crop of hay than his neighbor will be rewarded by a better price. Grain marketing has been standardized, but the hay market has been in a chaotic condition, due to the fact of no one particular class, the farmer, the dealer nor the consumer.

Mr. Parker said California ranks first, Nebraska second and Kansas third in hay production. Prairie hay is not shipped long distances because its feeding value is low and because of high freight rates.

In the absence of any statute relating to inspection of hay Secretary McLaughlin's attention was called to general provision in the Nebraska law establishing the department of agriculture which former Governor McKelvie interpreted to mean the department could expend funds for any purpose for the benefit of agriculture. Under the law the department formerly expended funds for cooperation with federal government in broadcasting markets and in furnishing market reports to newspapers and for general distribution by mail, wire or dario. That practice was discontinued by the Bryan state administration.

Mr. McLaughlin said he did not care to expend funds without a specific statute on the subject.

A conference of farmers was held last spring at Cozad to discuss hay inspection. Farmers there are reported much interested.
