HAS A NARROW ESCAPE

From Wednesday's Daily—
A. J. P. Bertschy, well known Omaha garage man, who at one time was here in charge of the machine works at the plant owned by Alexander McLaren, had a very close call from death yesterday in Omaha. Mr. Bertschy was standing on the sidewalk on the Fourteenth street side of the Paxton hotel conversing with a friend when a large block of wood which had been used by workmen in the placing of an aerial for radio use on the roof of the building, fell and in its downward passage just missed Mr. Bertschy by a very few inches. The accident occurred so quickly that Bertschy had no intimation of his danger until he felt the sudden whizz of the falling block of wood which was dashed to pieces at his feet on the sidewalk.

RECALLS PRISON MUTINY OF FIFTY YEARS AGO IN '76

James M. Robertson of This City Had Startling Experience in First Mutiny at Prison

From Wednesday's Daily—
James M. Robertson of this city, who in the early seventies was engaged in the employ of W. H. B. Stout, the contractor in charge of the building of the Nebraska state penitentiary, had the opportunity of witnessing the outbreak of the convicts at the penitentiary in January, 1876.

This incident of early Nebraska history was recalled very vividly to Mr. Robertson by the attempted break of Fred Brown and his companions Monday night. This morning Mr. Robertson gave a very interesting account of the attempt of convicts to escape that he had witnessed.

Mr. Robertson states that he was at that time at Lincoln in charge of the gang of men engaged in handling the stone for the buildings that were being erected and which form the present administration and part of the cell house buildings. At that time the penitentiary was enclosed by a high fence and the prisoners were quartered in large shed-like buildings enclosed in a wooden stockade until the stone buildings and walls could be completed by Mr. Stout.

On the day of the revolt Mr. Robertson had ridden horseback into the town of Lincoln and returned about noon to the scene of his work, stopping for dinner at the quarters of the contracting company. Mr. Robertson sent a man and team into the penitentiary grounds to bring out a load of the stone that had been cut by the convicts, and after some delay and the non-appearance of the man, Mr. Robertson sent in the second man to learn what was delaying his fellow worker and after a short time and the non-appearance of the men, Mr. Robertson started out to investigate the reason therefor.

As he approached the wooden wall around the convicts quarters, the little ten-year-old son of Warden Woodhurst was boosted over the fence by some friendly convict and stated to Mr. Robertson that the convicts were revolting and had escaped from the prison and had the wife of the warden as a prisoner, the warden being absent from the prison on business on that date.

The startling information from the child caused Mr. Robertson to hurriedly secure a horse and start to drive into Lincoln to give the alarm as in that day there were no telephones. On reaching the capital building, Mr. Robertson sounded the alarm and armed men as well as members of the legislature, then in session, secured horses and wagons and started for the penitentiary to assist in quelling the revolt.

On the arrival of the party of Lincoln people at the pen it was found that the band of convicts that had staged the mutiny were being held at bay in the building used as a dispensary and armory, by C. J. Nobes, deputy warden, who had escaped from the hands of the convicts and had checked their plans to break for freedom.

The bravery and daring of the deputy warden nipped in the bud the well arranged plans of the convicts and held them in check until the armed citizens arrived and who held the stone shed in a state of siege all that afternoon and night until the next morning when a detachment of soldiers from Fort Omaha arrived and completed the task of capturing the men who, being armed, had been able to defend the stone shed from assault. The convicts however were able to wring from the authorities a promise that they would not be punished for their actions.

The revolt was organized by Jim McWaters, a convict sent up from Otoe county, having resided in the vicinity of Wyoming. Two other convicts, Gery and Eldridge, were confederates of McWaters in planning the unsuccessful break.

The men were employed in the gang cutting stone for the pen walls and buildings and they had overpowered the guard in the shed and tied him up and as the two men sent in by Mr. Robertson appeared, they too were captured and tied and gagged in the shed building. Deputy Warden Nobes made several trips each day to the shed and as he appeared near the noon hour the convicts leaped on him and made him a prisoner. McWaters taking his clothes for himself and placing his discarded prison garb on Nobes. The convicts then marched Nobes with them into the dispensary, where they secured a quantity of liquor and then started for the armory, intending to arm themselves.

Nobes complained of his bonds being too tight and they were loosened so that by some little effort Mr. Nobes was able to get loose and grabbing a large drill Nobes drove the men into the armory building and secured a gun, standing guard at the only door leading into the building so that the convicts could not escape, until relief came from Lincoln.

Mr. Robertson states that McWaters was killed by a guard some two years later when he attempted an escape from the prison.

Winter Storage in the Garden
Parsnips, parsley, oyster plant and horse radish are not easily injured by freezing. They may be left right where they grew in the garden. However, too much freezing and thawing may cause spoilage. Therefore, the agriculture, Lincoln, advises that the plants be covered with a coat of straw which should be left on until freezing weather occurs, then taken off to allow the plants to freeze solid, and then replaced for the rest of the winter. This covering will keep the roots frozen through several days of warm weather. With this practice

To the Public!

The new King of Trails Bridge across the Platte River will soon be open for travel. We desire at this time to inform the Public as to the future ownership of the Bridge.

A corporation was formed to finance this Bridge. This corporation by unanimous vote has authorized its officers to turn over this Bridge to the Counties of Sarpy and Cass, and the State of Nebraska, whenever requested to do so. A resolution is on file with the State Highway Department to this effect.

The Commissioners of Sarpy and Cass have passed a resolution asking the State to take over this Bridge. Since the plans and specifications used for this Bridge were approved by the Federal-State Engineers and since construction has been under their supervision, there is no question about the State accepting the completed Bridge.

The law provides for an appraisal of the Bridge by the State Railway Commission. The State will pay its half in cash and the Counties will operate the Bridge for tolls till the balance of the cost is raised, when the Bridge will be opened free to the Public. Therefore, every dollar of tolls paid the new Bridge will make it free that much sooner. The District Court has set the rates the same as in effect heretofore.
