A Storm at Sea.

Paul had appealed to Caesar and unto Caesar he was to go, so said Festus, governor of Judea. This appealing unto Caesar had more in it than an escape from the hands of the late Jews. He was to go to Rome as a missionary and he was thus carried away from the Jews and their mechanisms only to meet more at Rome, but still to carry the message of the Master to the western world for this was a thousand and more years before America was discovered or was even thought of.

When it was decreed that Paul was to go to Rome, he with a number of other prisoners were placed in the hands of Julius, a centurion or as in our day of a company of Roman soldiers, enough of whom accompanied Julius to safely guard the prisoners from escape.

With Paul went a number of his companions, Luke, the writer of the Acts of the Apostles, Aristarchus, Trophimus, probably Timothy and Titus. When the Lord sent Paul to Rome he sent some workers along.

When ready to start, they found a ship of Adramyttium, whose route was to be by the coast of Asia Minor. The first morning following their start they touched at Sidou, where Paul was allowed to meet his friends and to refresh himself. They then sailed via the Island of Cyprus where Paul had preached when first leaving Antioch at the beginning of his missionary as a missionary to the gentiles.

They then went north, touching in order, Myra and Lycia in Panuhilia. At the latter place they found a ship bound for Rome, when they had sailed a number of days and made but little progress, passed the island of Rhodes, and came to Crete, passing Saliavice, they came to the harbor of Fair Havens, a harbor near the city of Lasea. The journey this far had been with much labor and no material progress made and as the day of attainment had passed, which would probably put them in the last of September or the first of October and getting that time of the year when there was very likely to be severe storms on the Mediterranean sea, it being surrounded by lands from which came storms. Paul who had a vision went to Julius and the captain saying that there would be the loss of the ship and cargo and endangering their lives. Julius put more faith in the captain and the ship owner, and as Fair Havens was a small harbor they thought they would go to Phenice, which had a larger harbor on the western portion of the island of Crete. The wind had been against them all the way but now changed to the south and they started feeling that a good voyage was ahead of them. They had not sailed far when a hurricane, which sometimes last for days came from the mountains of Crete. The wind being so strong and fierce that they could not sail against it so they let the vessel drift, being driven by the storm. They passed on the island of Clauda, here they took their small boat aboard, which had been towed before, and also lashed the ship, running cables around it to make it more secure. Fearing that they would run into the coast of Africa where there are large areas of quick sands which would engulf the vessel, they were rescued and the ship allowed to drive before the winds. The next day being one of the most tempestuous they threw a part of the cargo into the sea. The third day even the tackles of the ship were thrown overboard in order to lighten it. Thus for fourteen days they were driven up and down the sea during the entire time seeing neither sun nor moon or stars. All had almost lost hope and were not expecting to escape with their lives. At this time, as Paul slept, there stood by him an Angel of God which said unto him, "Fear not Paul; thou must be brought before Caesar; and lo, God hath given thee life and will spare thee. Therefore take heed, and stand fast, for nothing for nearly two weeks said: "See, ye should have harkened unto me, and not have sailed from Crete and you would not have suffered this loss. Now I expect you to be of good cheer, for all will be saved but the ship will be lost, but we will be cast upon a certain island. Be of good cheer, I believe God, he will do as he told me during the fourteenth night that that we had been out of sight of sun, moon and stars." They felt as a sailor does that they were nearing land. So they took a sounding and found the water was 20 fathoms or just 120 feet deep. There again in a little they sounded and found only 15 fathoms or 90 feet, fearing they might run on rocks they cast out four anchors from the hinder part of the ship and wished for the coming of day.

They sure had spent two weeks of tense experience, now these few hours were terrible, one expecting every minute the boat to sink or be dashed to pieces. Some of the sailors sought to get away in one of the small boats and as Paul said, "Under color as they would cast an anchor in front of the ship let the board down, but the ship hit the boat down but Paul perceiving their intentions said unto the centurion and soldiers "except these abide in the ship ye cannot be saved."

Then the soldiers cut the ropes from the boat and let her drift, while the day was coming Paul took bread and returning thanks ate and gave to the others, he all eating. They then all were of good cheer and threw every thing of the cargo, the wheat and all the rest, into the sea. There were in all on the ship 276 people. As the dawn came they discovered an island in which there was a cove with a creek running into it. They then cut the anchor off and fastened a sail and made for the short. They had not proceeded far before the front of the ship struck a sand bar and stuck fast and as two currents met here the stern of the ship lashed with such force that the ship was broken notwithstanding the lashing of cables that it had. The soldiers held a council and decided to kill the prisoners lest some swim ashore and escape for the soldiers lives had to stand for a prisoner they allowed toescape.

Julius who wished to spare Paul decided that those who could swim to first jump into the sea and get to shore, so as to take what prisoners were able to get to shore. As the ship was breaking up many pieces of timber and boards were floating to shore and thus all escaped. This fulfilled what Paul had said. There shall not a hair of any of you be lost but the ship and cargo shall be lost.

WHAT IS THIS "ORGANIZED AGRICULTURE?"

Press releases have said that Organized Agriculture will be held the first week of January, 1926, at the Agricultural College Campus in Lincoln. What is this Organized Agricultural anyway? Many people simplify the name by calling the week, "The Winter Meetings."

In the first place, every farm and home organization in Nebraska that wishes holds its annual program and business meeting during this week at this one place. Their programs cover the big problems confronting them in their special interests in farming or homemaking. Every organization is entirely made of farmers, homemakers and college faculty.

Second, anyone who wishes may attend any of these meetings, regardless of whether or not he belongs to or joins any association. Third, there are no fees or expenses connected with attending the meeting. All membership in organizations is voluntary, and all other expenses of the sessions are borne by the State Board of Agricultural and the Agricultural College.

A general mass meeting on Thursday afternoon gives everyone a chance to meet together and listen to two of the foremost speakers of the country. The Farmers Family Fun Feed on Wednesday evening is the big social event of the week, more fun and more feed being provided there for than at any other time or place in the state.

CLEAN JOURNALISM

American journalism shows a constantly increasing tendency to cast off sensationalism and morbidity in favor of higher ideals and clean morals.

William McAndrews, superintendent of schools in Chicago, under the caption, "Can Morality Be Taught Directly?" urged that "When we see the opposite of morality directly taught by nasty dramas, salacious literature, disorderly moving pictures, daily details of crime and lawlessness, * * * there comes to every man and woman in this education business the dreadful realization that vice is teachable."

If the world's moral progress is to keep up with its progress along lines of material advancement, a decided and world-wide change of front must be obtained as a result of journalistic efforts.
