WHEN TO TALK

President Lowell of Harvard, in his first newspaper interview, boasted that he has not spoken "to the press for seventeen years."

Recently Bishop Candler of Georgia made a similar boast, although the bishop contributes a weekly article to the newspapers. They make the boast somewhat in the sense that whatever success they have achieved has come from refusing to talk to the newspapers.

There is an element of common sense in refraining from interviews with the newspapers, but the common sense comes not in refusing to "speak to the press" but knowing when to speak.
