THE CHURCH'S TASK

No agency in America is more active than the Federal Council of Churches in the premotion of applied Christianity in such fields as industry, politics, international relations, racial situations, and child labor. Doubly significant, therefore, is this published statement of its general secretary, Dr. Samuel McCrae Cavert: "We are in danger of forgetting, in these days of concern over the problem of modern society, that we shall never have a better society without better men. The new world that we seek requires first of all new men—men with purified purposes and with creative moral power."

In those words are summed up the church's greatest tash. It is in the training of the youth of the land to a keen sense of righteousness, to a true moral and spiritual idealism, and to acknowledge of citienship. The development of moral character and of religious consciousness is even paramount to physical well-being and to mental attainment.

Nowhere is the need more graphically put than in a study of the youth of the land just completed by Prof. Walter S. Athearn of Boston University. After an extensive survey, he asserts that of the 53,197,000 boys and girls under 25 years of age in the United States, 36,873,000 receive no religious instruction from any agency. He then puts this pertinent question: "How long can the moral intregity of a nation be maintained when seven out of every ten of its children and youths receives no systematic moral or religious training?"

Dr. Athearn's study leads him to the conclusion that there is "a low level of ethical ideas in selected samples of American youth" and "a high susceptibility to immoral conduct among typical groups of American youths." He demonstrates that the war had little to do with present crime conditions, because the average age of major criminals today is 21 years, and more than half of the automobile thieves are boys of high school age. Ten years ago the average age of criminals was 28.

As the moral sense deceases, crime increases. The only alternative is an adequate religious training. It is clear that making provision for this requirement is the greatest task of the church today.

HAS YOUTH DETERIORATED?

In the Forum magazine for July appears an interesting discussion of the question "Has Youth Deteriorated?" Two college girls debate the subject one of them mantaining that youth is movie fast in the wrong direction, the other expressing optimism and declaing that Youth is holding fast to all that really matters.

The summary paragraphs of the two debate offer opportunity for thought.

Pessimis speaks as follows:

"My quarel with the young people of today concerns the loss of a thing some call inate refinement. We lack a certain dignity of charm and refinement wch, despite their silly convention and their inhibitions, our fathers and mothers are not without. We ung people are like a herd of calves enclosed in a wide pasture. Leaderless we rush, in an impetuous, juvenile stampede, toward the far-the pasture gates, not knowing what lies beyond,—more pasture lands, or cliffs. We have hurled aside all convention. Accepted standards are :nil' us. And now, without precedents, having all antecedents, we are as old and as intrinsically uninteresting as a plucked ostrich. We have sowed the wind, we are reaping the whirlwind. True, we have our freedom, our 'self expression,' and our inhibitionless theories. Even at that, however, I am wondering if the past generations haven't something on us."

Optimism offers the following reply:

"All of the petty things to which you, a generation or two ahead of us, attach so much importance, are mere symbols of a revolt, whose object is Freedom,—Freedom, the cry of the ages,—and it is only in this light that they would be regarded. Beauty and idealism, the two eternal heritages of Youth, are still alive. It is only the form of expression which they have assumed that has been mistaken for their death knoll. Laugh it off, you who are alarmed at this fabulous monster of Youth! Pay less attention to the surface signs of the revolt and more to the good things being accomplished by it. Remember how the expression affected you when your parents cried—'O Tempora! O Mores.' And the funny part is that the young insurgent who today inspires your wrath will one day be saying to a group of tolerant youngsters—'Things certainly have changed. Now in my days—'."

WHEN LIGHTNING HITS

Your own chance of being killed by lightning is extremely small, but any chance of death cannot be considered negligible. Each year a few are killed by electric discharges, and it is very likely that a considerable percentage of this small total might be saved by the exercise of such caution as is recommended by scientists who have studied the freaks of lightning.

Undoubtedly everyone should "know enough to come in out of the rain" when an electrical storm is in progress. A human creature indoors is not an object sufficiently isolated to attract the bolt which is seeking an easy path to the earth. But to watch a fine electrical storm from the vantage of a sheltered porch or varanda is doubtless quite as safe as to immure oneself. In either case there can be no harm unless the edifice itself is struck.

If one is caught in the open it is wise to avoid the shelter of trees, especially such sappy trees as the elm. Water is one of the best conductors of electricity, and a watery tree like the elm is one of the best conductors of electricity, and a watery tree like the elm is very likely to attract likhtning. If one is in the open during a violent thunder storm it is well to lie flat on the earth.

There are cases reported of persons that have been struck by lightning and have suffered no serious harm. The body is largely composed of water, and if the clothing is dry the bolt will pass through the body. If the clothing is saturated the bolt may follow the clothing instead of the body. It is advised by some that anyone caught in a thunder storm in the wilds should immerse himself in order to saturate his garments, or, if this be impossible, to expose himself to the rain in order to be drenched at once.

There are few manifestations of nature's power more awe-inspiring and at the same time more fascinating than a violent thunder storm. Comparatively few adults acknowledge a feeling of terror in the presence of this majestic display. There is, however, a distinct difference between fear and caution. The danger from lightning is never greater, but it exists and it should be reduced as nearly as possibly to the vanishing point.

HAS CAR BURNED

From Tuesday's Daily—

Yesterday morning the fine new Buick "Master 6" belonging to Dr. Sturgess of Omaha, was destroyed by fire in this city, the car being caught on fire as the result of some shortage in the car it is thought. The doctor, in company with Wayne H. Allen of Omaha, had driven here to enjoy the celebration and the two gentlemen were enroute to the home of Mr. Allen's parents in the south part of the city when the fire took place. They had turned off the paving on Chicago avenue and were about half way up the hill on Patterson avenue when Mr. Allen smelled something burning and inquired as to the cause of the smoke that was filling the car, he thinking at first that the clothing of himself or his companion had been caught on fire from some sparks. Glancing backward Mr. Allen was startled to see smoke pouring out of the back of the car and hastily getting out the two gentlemen found that the rear portion of the car was burning very rapidly. As they were some distance away from any residences where they might secure water the fire gutted the inside of the car and the seats, furnishings as well as the paint on the car was burned off and making the car a practical loss.

ENJOY FAMILY GATHERING

From Tuesday's Daily—

The home of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Horn in this city was the scene of a very delightful family gathering on Monday when for the first time in many months the members of the family were all present to enjoy the day and to observe the double celebration of the national independence day as well as the birthday anniversary of Mrs. Horn. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Goodchild and little daughter, Jean and Miss Bernese Horn of Omaha came down for the occasion and Miss Lucille Horn, who is attending the summer school at the University of Nebraska, was also here for the day.

WHAT IS FLORIDALE?

FLORIDALE is a 50,000 acre tract of fertile soil on the uplands of West Florida, owned by the same people for 32 years. Native pine has been cleared from great acreages and demonstration plots have been devoted to determining what fruits and crops can be grown most profitably.

NOW, it is ready for settlers. You can buy five acres or more, planted to oranges, blueberries, grapes, plums and other fruits. Select cleared land and virgin pine-lands also available. Complete nursery, trained horticulturist, poultry expert and general farm adviser available to help settlers. All year round green foliage ideal for poultry and dairying.

THERE is no guess work about this development. Land prices are reasonable; profits from the soil are surprisingly large. And it is a beautiful, pleasant place to live. We will help you make full investigation. Write for illustrated booklet about Floridale today.
