MY FATHER LOVES ME

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

The will of the people who have it, assert your citizenship by voting tomorrow.

Rouge is popular because lack of sleep doesn't ruin rouge.

Ford Cars continue to go down, but their riders go up and down.

No one can deny that the French franc is now within the reach of all.

Eve never taunted Adam about the number of men who had proposed to her.

A Kansas man has discovered how to find a needle in a haystack. He sat on it.

The primary will soon be over and then what? And then nearly three months until election.

When a woman is getting the worst of it in argument with a man she says "Oh, that is just like a man!"

The time has arrived in this state that the people vote for those most competent, irrespective of politics.

Once it was marry in haste and repent at leisure, but now it's marry in haste and repent at frequent intervals.

Democrat or Republican—everyone should go to the polls tomorrow and vote his or her choice of the candidates.

Flo Ziegfeld predicts the return of the plump girl. This craze for the narrow figure has gone too far. A producing manager, passing on applicants for a new show, can't tell whether most of them are facing him or standing sideways.

Last call! Go and vote tomorrow.

People who go away for a vacation don't always get one.

It is propaganda that springs eternal in the human breast.

Men who have achieved can always give advice, but try to follow it!

The world is filled with great men; what it needs is more human ones.

Most folks think there is little hope for the poet, and so does the poet.

The first business failure was the firm of Adam and Eve, fruit dealers.

Kings are of no great importance these days, except to head processions.

Some men's idea of an art collection is a windshield full of stickers.

Worry will make people thin, except when they worry about being fat.

Howard Saxton for attorney general. Remember him at the polls tomorrow.

Cooler weather to stay. So say the weather prognosticators. How sweet you are to us!

It is not the abandoned farms that are now causing the trouble; it's the abandoned farmers.

It might be well to remember that the oldest families are likely to have the most to be ashamed of.

"Pop" Ederle wins $175,000 on his daughters victory across the channel, and "Trudie" gets a fine auto.

The odds are ten to one, that the man who complains about a public official is a man who didn't vote either way.

Someone in the United States has a good word to say for Mussolini. Distance does lend enchantment to the view.

What the nations seem to want is enough armament to avoid getting licked by any nation having as much armament.

Opposition or no opposition, show your respect for Charley W. Bryan, by voting for him tomorrow. And the same for John H. Morehead for congress.

FISHING FOR COMPLIMENTS

A universal craving is for appreciation.

Everybody desires others to think he is doing the right thing.

Many are the ideas of what constitutes right, but each person wants his idea corroborated.

Even the tough wants people to recognize that he is tough.

"The particular compliment that he desires is to be called 'hard.'"

It is often desirable to be left alone. But to be completely unknown and ignored is the most terrible punishment of all.

It is said that the most desperate criminal would break if he knew not one person in the world acquired his acts.

It is the feeling that someone, somewhere, approves of his act that keeps him going.

In everyday life it requires a strong man to look beyond his condonation and approval of those around him and repress the desire to do what will make him popular where he is.

Washington D. C. tests the mettle of presidents.

It is a popular axiom that to win the general favor of the nation means being unpopular in Washington.

Only the strong president can see beyond the hue and cry of his surrounding office holders to the real feeling of the people.

It is always a pitiable scene to perceive anyone "fishing for compliments."

You sense the craving for approval, the feeling of the need of confirmation, and the burning desire for the esteem of his fellows.

Yet it always arouses a sense of disgust or sadness. For it reveals a littleness of character. It shows that the person lacks the self-control and sincerity to keep on struggling to achieve so indisputably that heart-felt, unsolicited praise will come of itself.

Praise is the by-product of well doing.

Someone has said, "Praise no man ever deserved, who sought no more."

In the words of Albert J. Beveridge: "Fly from the desire for applause as from a pestilence. To a strong man achievement is the only applause of value—the making of his point."

OVERDOING IT

The annual report of the American battle monuments commission adds weight to Gen. Pershing's objection to the free construction of American war memorials in France and Belgium by states and organizations.

On its tour, recently made, of investigation the commission visited, in addition to the war cemeteries, fourteen permanent and fifty-five temporary war memorials constructed by or for American military organizations.

It found in a number of cases that these memorials already were unkempt and deteriorating, frequently surrounded by weeds and brush; that in no less than three instances they were constructed upon land not accredited by the war department to the organization in whose name they were built, and accordingly were historically inaccurate.

And to these objections is to be added one not mentioned by the commission, but recently referred to by Gen. Pershing. Too many monuments will tend to exaggerate this nation's contribution to the victory, and if many are constructed some will deteriorate to a point where they will no longer be a credit to the nation or the military organization whose achievements they were intended to commemorate.

Or they will throw up our war allies a burdensome expense for maintenance for all time.

The cemeteries, of course, should be maintained properly. A conspicuous monument to American soldiers and sailors who died in the service, in Paris or some other French city, would be entirely fitting, but of minor monuments in France we probably have too many already.

THE FILMS HAVE IT

It used to be said that public opinion was molded largely by what people read. People read more in that day, of course, than they saw or heard.

With the radio and the movies, this is changing. Current thought is under new influences, the word that filters in through the night air, the picture that is cast upon the silver screen.

Movies have grown up in America to the point where 130,000,000 in the weekly attendance at motion picture theaters. When you figure that this is nearly 14,000,000 more than there are people in the United States, you realize what a tremendous force in our national life the movie has become.

Gertrude Ederle swims the channel and beats all men's records. To America belongs the victor. Hurrah for Trudie!

Judge Morrissey is one of the most competent men that ever sat upon the Supreme bench, and should be re-elected.

Thousands Will Camp At The Nebraska State Fair

New Camp Grounds have been added at the Nebraska State Fair at Lincoln this year, doubling the former capacity.

Clamping is free and your auto is parked free right beside your tent. Easy access from Camp Grounds up town.

Electric Lights, Toilets, City Water, and all Modern Conveniences right near your tent. Thousands camp there every year.

Make the State Fair your vacation. It's one of the big Expositions of the country. 300 Thousand people will go through the gates.

A monster program every afternoon and evening. It's the biggest show for the least money to be found in the United States.

Bring your camp outfit, but if you don't have a tent or cot you can rent them on the grounds. Good roads shorten the distance. Let's go.

LIMITS OF SCIENCE

The mistake of thinking that scientific men never err is often made.

During the current conflict between science and religion this mistake is particularly unfortunate.

To give to science, a quality of accuracy which it does not actually possess is obviously placing the question on an unsound basis.

Science can prove much. Much also is beyond its power of interpretation.

Henshaw Ward, writing in the current issue of Harper's on the subject "When I Raise My Arm," comments on this in part as follows—

"When I lift my right hand eight inches and turn a leaf on the novel I am reading, I put into operation more forces than science will ever explain. Indeed, they are so numerous and ineffable that science will never complete the mere listing of them.

The human intellect cannot know much about the mysteries that are in the action of a muscle.

"All our philosophers, after twenty-five centuries of most ardent analysis, cannot determine whether I will turn the leaf or whether I will turn the leaf or whether I will turn the leaf for the joint action of some neuronic forces. Our psychologists have no conception of what an 'I' is.

So nothing can be said of the origin of this motion of my arm. It simply appeared from a region as unexplored as Heaven.

"When it first emerged into a material world it was an impulse of some sort in the outer layer of the center portion of the top of my brain.

Of course anatomy does not know the exact location of the spot—it simply has a little evidence that the motion was propagated from somewhere in that neighborhood."

We should not give science credit for being something more than it is. Radio, electric light, the phonograph—these are wonderful things, monuments to science. But all of them put together are less wonderful than what happens when you raise your hand eight inches in the air.

The scientists are still scratching the surface. They have not yet reached the heart of the great question of sources.

THE GOLDEN FLOOD

From the Missouri Valley region, the great wheat belt, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and western Iowa, comes a flood of gold, millions of dollars' worth of food for the world.

One day's receipts of wheat at the Kansas City market recently were almost 3,000,000 bushels, for which the farmers received about $3,450,000.

Such shipments speak well for the prosperity of the region.

The great wheat crop to be marketed this year offers an important lesson in water shipping and a few interesting figures on costs. The saving over rail costs of shipping a bushel of wheat from St. Louis to New Orleans is 3 cents. If the shipment were started at Kansas City the saving would become 6 cents.

If the 3,000,000 bushels received at Kansas City on one day recently were shipped by water from Kansas City the saving over rail rates would be $180,000. A tidy sum for a days' saving! And if it were applied to the Kansas crop alone the saving would be about $9,000,000.

The region has been urging that something be done about making the Missouri river navigable. On the basis of figures such as these the projects advanced seem sound economy.

Gertrude Ederle swims the channel and beats all men's records. To America belongs the victor. Hurrah for Trudie!

Judge Morrissey is one of the most competent men that ever sat upon the Supreme bench, and should be re-elected.

DUTY OF THE CITIZENS

Senator Reed of Missouri says the man who contaminates the liberty of the ballot is "worse than any murderer." Other men also have placed election crimes in the category of serious offense against the public interest.

The senator's language is characteristically strong. His thought, however, is worthy of consideration.

The late Cardinal Gibbons, reviewing our modern civilization in one of the most thoughtful of his words, devoted a chapter to the national evils traceable to the operations of election crooks and uttered the solemn warning that the American people are lax in attention to civil duty.

He wrote both as a churchman and a political philosopher, and what he said is applicable to political conditions as they have been revealed recently.

There is not enough political thinking among the average men and women of the country. No one more keenly realizes the truth of this than the man who debauches elections.

The most distinguished service President Calles could render to his country would be the revising of the constitution in such a way that, while safeguarding the rights of all Mexicans, it invades and destroys the rights of none.

Many persons wonder why primaries are held so far in advance of election. The explanation is simple. It's to give party candidates plenty of time to take back all they have said about their opponents within the party.
