

MURDOCK DEPARTMENT.

PREPARED EXCLUSIVELY FOR THE JOURNAL.

John Shoeman of Louisville was looking after some business matters in Murdock on last Thursday.

Archie and Walter Towle of South Ben, were visiting with relatives in Murdock on last Thursday afternoon.

Miss Hope Allen has been visiting for the past week at the home of her friends, Mr. and Mrs. I. C. McCrorey.

H. W. Tool was a visitor in Lincoln on last Thursday where he was called to look after some business matters.

Miss Henrietta Bauer is spending her vacation at Detroit where she is the guest of some of her girl friends.

William Kittrell of South Bend, was looking after some business matters in Murdock on last Thursday afternoon.

John Fowler and O. J. Potstast were over to Mynard and Plattsmouth, driving over to look after some business matters.

Jesse Hill and wife of Omaha were guests last Saturday and remained for over Sunday at the home of the sister of Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Una McHugh.

The Rev. J. W. Bandy and family, who have been located northwest of Lincoln, are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Tool for a short time.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Towle, after having spent some two weeks in the Yellowstone Park, returned home last Tuesday and have taken up house-keeping.

W. O. Schewe and family were visiting at Ashland on last Sunday afternoon where they were enjoying the drilling contests of the Nebraska National Guards.

John Eppings will soon move to the Ray Baldwin home and is having the property fixed up with a new roof.

and other improvements and it will make a good home.

A. H. Ward and J. C. Newman were over to Lincoln on last Thursday to secure some repairs for an auto which Mr. Ward was making some repairs on for Mr. Newman.

Rev. J. W. Peters returned last week from Madison where he was to attend the Northern Conference of the Lutheran church, and where he drove with his auto.

Jess Landholm is putting a car into condition for the boys who annually make the fishing and hunting trip to the northwest, they expecting to go some time in September.

Lawrence Rikli, who has been so ill for some months, is reported as being some better at this time and hopes are now entertained that he may continue to improve.

L. A. Gordon and George Utt and the women folks were visiting and looking after some business matters in Lincoln on last Thursday, they driving over in their auto.

Douglass Tool, has been visiting at the home of his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. McKinnon, northwest of Alvo and also has been attending the Chautauqua at that place.

O. J. Potstast and wife had for their guests at a six o'clock dinner at their home in Murdock on last Thursday evening, where all present enjoyed the evening most pleasantly.

The Rev. W. J. Peters of Sidney, pastor of the Lutheran church at that place, accompanied by the family, have been visiting at the home of his parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Peters of Murdock.

There will be no preaching services for the next two Sundays, as Rev. A. Stauss will attend the S. S. and E. L. C. E. convention at Milford; but the Sunday school will hold its regular sessions.

Mrs. James Hendricks of Crab Orchard, was over to Murdock on last Saturday evening, coming with the car to take Mr. Hendricks, assistant cashier of the Farmer's and Merchants bank home for over the week end.

Henry Bergman, living a short distance west of Murdock, had the misfortune to have a colt killed by lightning well as three places on his barn where the lightning picked a few shingles off, but the barn was not set on fire.

Henry Schlueter and family departed early last week for the west and will visit for some two weeks and will see some of the natural wonders of the west, and will visit at Colorado Springs, Denver and Estes Park, while they are away.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Schlaphoff were in Lincoln on last Thursday afternoon, where they were trading and also were at the hospital to see Mrs. William Langhorst, who is recovering after having undergone an operation at that place.

G. Bauer and L. Neitzel were over to Ithica on last Sunday, they driving over and attending the Bible school and morning preaching at the church where Mr. Neitzel himself ministered years ago. They also visited during the afternoon with their many friends.

Mrs. Cora Fraus, formerly of Elmwood, but who has been making her home in Denver, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Mueller, of Springfield, were visiting for a short time last week at the home of Mrs. A. J. Tool, they having been friends in their childhood days.

The business interests of Murdock are doing a generous thing in treating their customers to a free band concert every Wednesday evening and a free moving picture show every Friday night. It seems the patrons appreciate this as they come in great numbers and enjoy them for some two weeks.

Otto Miller and family departed on last Sunday for Milford where they are spending a few days at the convention of the Bible Schools and also that of the Christian Endeavor societies of the Evangelical Lutheran church, which will be in session for some two weeks.

The program which was sponsored by Mesdames Jess Landholm and John Kruger which was put on the air at the office of the Henry Fields Seed company, last Saturday, was enjoyed by many all over the country, for it was an excellent program and was presented in a very delightful manner.

L. Neitzel has adopted the following slogan for his store, and invites the trade to see for themselves if it is not true: "The Store with the Stock." He carries such a complete line, as is seldom found in a small town and compares well with the larger city stores. Go and see and be convinced.

Last Friday, Emil Bornemeier and family and R. C. Deles Denier and wife were over to Shenandoah, Ia., where they went for a picnic and enjoyed the day most splendidly as well as stopping at the Henry Fields' Glad-jolia farm, near Bartlett where there are fifty acres in flowers, and which all declare is most beautiful.

John Gustin and wife, with the children, Francis and Hilda, and accompanied by Grandfather Albert Theil, were all over to Ashland on last Sunday where they dined for dinner in the grove and in the afternoon enjoyed the drilling by the National Guard and the presentation of the prizes to the different companies.

Edward Brunkow and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gillespie, of near Murdock, Charles Haertel and wife, John Gustin and wife, Albert Boes and wife and John Box and family were spending the day at Shenandoah, where they enjoyed seeing the city and the two seed stations. On their return they stopped at Weeping Water for the band concert which was given on the streets.

Charles Kupke and wife and daughter Elise were visiting at Shenandoah last Wednesday, they driving over via Nebraska City and Sidney and enjoying the trip very much. They visited at the two seed houses at the Iowa city and on their return they came back via Malvern, Glenwood and Plattsmouth, thus seeing much of the country. Mr. Kupke said that the crops are looking fine.

Wedded Last Sunday.

The Rev. Theodore Hartman, who presides of the Lutheran church at Madison, had to hasten home to meet an appointment to perform the wedding ceremony which wedded his daughter to the Rev. John E. Herrmann, who is pastor at the church at Lovell, Wyo. The newly married folks will be at home to their friends in the west after a few weeks.

Will Establish Station Here.

The Farmers Paint and Oil company will establish a station here for the distribution of their output in Murdock. Mr. L. A. Gordon has secured enough members to justify the establishment of a station here where the goods will be distributed to the surrounding country via trucks. Jess Landholm will be placed in charge of the station here.

A. C. Depner Injures His Foot.

A. C. Depner, the contractor and builder, while working at the home of Henry Klemme, had the misfortune to slip and seeing he was sure to fall from a scaffold, which was quite high, jumped with the result that he injured one of his feet to the extent that he has had to stop his work and is getting about only by the aid of a pair of crutches. He had the injured member cared for by the physician and it is getting along as well as could be looked for under the nature of the injury.

Shall Murdock Celebrate.

The custom was barely established creating a Ford Day, for lack of a better name, when the promoter, and one of the most active citizens of Murdock was called away and now the question arises, shall the celebration be held this year. Just now there is no one to go ahead with the movement, and it occasions considerable expense, as well as the time being short for any considerable movement in this direction. Then why not a one day's picnic which could be held without any expense. The gathering could be held at the site of the old school, where there is an abundance of shade, everyone bringing their dinner and it being eaten in picnic style. And amusements provided a plenty, and instead of an outlay, there would be some money accumulated for a celebration the coming year, when more elaborate preparations could be made. For the time right now amusement could be provided with a couple of ball games and races which would not cost to install. What do you think about it gentlemen?

Murdock on the Air.

Last Saturday night Murdock took the air at KFNB the Henry Field seed station, and for the two hours which their program lasted furnished a most enjoyable program. Of all the entertainments which have been broadcasted, none have exceeded this one in excellence, and but few equalled it. Even the work of little Varona Landholm, came through in fine shape. Try it again Murdock, you have the talent and surely can succeed.

TWO NATIONS TO FIGHT COMMUNICABLE DISEASES

St. Paul, Aug. 20.—American and Canadian health authorities will conduct a concerted drive against communicable diseases during the six month period beginning with September, reports Dr. A. J. Chesley, secretary treasurer of the conference of state and provincial health authorities of North America. Diphtheria will be dealt with during September, small pox during November and December and typhoid fever during January and February. "A survey will be made of each locality," said Doctor Chesley, "and an extensive educational campaign will be promoted to make certain that every person understands that these diseases are communicable and that by immunization and vaccinations they are preventable." State and provincial health officers, all of whom are members of the conference, automatically become members of the campaign committee to foster the movement.

Co-operation of the American medical association, the Canadian medical association, the federal health department of the dominion of Canada, and the United States public health service has been promised.

CHEMICALS WAR FACTOR

Williamstown, Mass., Aug. 20.—There is no longer a choice, in regard to the adoption of chemical warfare, Sir James Irvine, noted British scientist, told the institute of politics tonight. At present the nation which possesses the almost the most effective instruments of war, for as long as the chemical factory remains, it is a potential war factor. "Quite possibly the war of the future may be declared, waged and won in a few days," he said. "The alteration necessary for the conversion of passenger airplanes into bombing machines is not serious and the chemical factories can provide the poison shell filling which the airplanes will distribute on their obnoxious journey. There is no longer need for heavy guns or the customary materials of war."

World's Youth Looked to for Peace Impetus

Huge Pacific Congress in Paris Will Study World Problems—30 Countries Represented.

Paris.—The peace camp, swollen to 5000 delegates from 30 countries, enters this week on the actual International Pacific Congress. The first two weeks were spent in sightseeing and instruction. Now the great canvas town at Bierville is debating under a warm August sun in a charming wooded country the immense problems which still trouble the world. Particularly is the youth of all countries interested in the movement, and the young men and women from the universities and the surrounding country via trucks. Jess Landholm will be placed in charge of the station here.

Among those present are Henry Atkinson, United States; Sir Wiloughby Dickson, England; Kingsley Martin, England; Louis Rolland, France; Hermann Platz and Dr. Lobe, Germany; Albert Carnoy, Belgium; Mr. Plasecki, Poland, and such orators as Paul Painleve, Edouard Herriot, Mr. Bokanowski, Marc Sangnier, Aristide Briand and Joseph Caillaux will speak or extend their patronage in the effort to clarify the currents of ideas flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented.

Frank Exchange of Views.

It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only in Europe and America but Africa and Asia, which are also represented. It is from a frank interchange of the views of youth still inspired by generous ideas, stimulated by university training that the greatest impetus to peace is believed to come. Louis Barthou, Vice-President of the French government, in a speech before the congress, made an eloquent reference to the work accomplished at Locarno and Geneva. He declared that the entire cabinet grouped around Raymond Poincare, whom they admired and respected, were profoundly attached to the advancement of the cause of peace. "No country was more indisputably in need of peace than France," he said, "and flowing not only