THE WOLF AND THE LAMB

The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.—Isaiah 11:6.

Upholding the dignity of his profession, Jack Dempsey, champion pugilist and erstwhile war ship builder, scorns a challenge to a street fight and suggests a substitute when Harry Willis offers to meet the champ at any corner and knock his block off. Besides, Mr. Dempsey explains with a slight uptilt to his rebuilt nose, he does not make his living that way. All of which admits of no debate.

"When one bee discovers an unusually fine place to collect honey," writes Arthur Brisbane, "he returns to the hive and begins a violent dance. Then the other bees swarm out to get their share." Arthur should have noted that this applies only to the bees of the younger generation with their propensity for synthetic honey. Such scandalous demonstrations were unknown among bees of the pre-Volstead era.

THE ILLINOIS ECLIPSE

Now that the country is waking up to what happened in the Illinois primaries, we see little in the public print any more of what happened in Pennsylvania.

In truth, what happened in Illinois is quite a different thing. No more portentous thing presents itself in American politics. The Pennsylvania primary was a three-cornered contest among millionaires. One of them had the tariff money of Pennsylvania behind him, but it was still a race among millionaires.

The Illinois primary was far more sinister than that. It was an incident in which the great electrical utilities swept the people aside and took over the selection of a candidate for the senate. Everybody sees this quite clearly now. It was as if in the Missouri primaries the Frisco and the Missouri Pacific railroads had decided the matter between them and thrust the rest of the voters out.

It was not a coincidence that the nominee in the Illinois primaries was also chairman of the commission which fixes electrical rates in Illinois.

That is what politics in Illinois have come to. The American people have been warned for almost 50 years that our great industrial development would come to exactly this if we did not establish safeguards against it. How feeble those defenses were the Illinois primary shows. "I have an interest to protect," says Samuel G. Insull, electrical magnate, justifying his debauchery of the ballot.

But the people have a much greater interest to protect. That is why the Illinois primaries are being so widely discussed and why we hear no more of what happened in Pennsylvania. The Illinois primaries struck at the keystone of our political structure. The greatest experiment ever made in democracy will fail if the ballot can be prostituted.

Fortunately, the country sees this. It is already moving against it. If the senate dares seat the man sent to it by corporate interest in Illinois there will not be a man who so voted whom the wrath of the people will spare. Illinois, meanwhile, does nothing. She is to fast in the clutches of the big business interests which have brought her to this plight.

But she is a rotten apple in the national barrel, and the barrel means to save itself.

CHANGE

In older times, everything was measured by its durability.

The pyramids were built to house the exalted dead until judgment day. The law of the Medes and Persians were proclaimed as unalterable.

Generation after generation grew up with the idea that whatever stood still was strong, while whatever changed was weak.

This held civilization back quite as definitely as lack of skill.

Men became not only distrustful, but afraid of change.

They gazed out over the Atlantic for hundreds of years before they dared to cross it.

They hesitated to penetrate the frozen north.

Europe and Asia remained separate, though it was only a matter of walking to get from one to the other.

There were imaginary lines on every horizon that few had the temerity to pass.

If these lines held people within their homelands, their native towns and villages, they enslaved them when it came to science.

The traveler was looked upon as a freak, and the thinker as an evil spirit.

As late as 1780, Franklin's lightning rod was prosecuted in France as an invention of the devil.

When McCormick demonstrated his reaper, farm hands rioted because they feared it would put them out of work.

The man who never changed his mind was regarded as peculiarly good.

The first problem of the modern world was to break this all-powerful tradition, this abiding fear of change.

With respect to most material activities, it has been pretty well solved. Ice men are not rioting because electrical refrigerators have been put on the market.

They realize that it may put them out of business, but are willing to take a change.

Everybody is coming to see that change—orderly, well thought out of course—is the sine qua non of progress.

RECKLESS DRIVERS

The motorists who go tearing down a street in the residential district, heedless of the children playing along the sidewalks, is a potential murderer.

No other phrase fittingly describes him. At any moment one of those little children might dart into the street after a ball, or some other plaything and be ground to death beneath the wheels.

There are so many children in Plattsmouth, and there are so few playgrounds, that the danger of accident of this character is increasing daily, and only by the exercise of caution by motorists can tragedies be averted.

Mothers will tell you how hard it is to convince the little chaps that just out beyond the curb is No Child's Land, and that whoever ventures beyond the gutter may be killed instantly, and there cannot be any more play for them.

And there are the crossings, too, where it is extremely hazardous for children to pass. All of them are cautioned by their parents to stop, look and listen. But the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts. Sometimes they forget. They may be thinking of Christmas, or Santa Claus, or God knows what babbling brook or cooling parched brown toes.

And sometimes motorists forget and fail to slow down at crossings where the children pass. Sometimes the motorists go speeding by the stop signs just as if they were on open country road.

And that is why the deaths of so many children are reported in the news columns.

If anything should give these motor outlaws, the killing of a little child should be sufficient to bring them around to a rule of reason and sobriety.

Nobody, unless he possesses a crack-brain, would kill a little child, but they are being killed!

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

The senate "slush fund" investigators met temporary defeat in Chicago at the hands of two star witnesses who "defied the committee" and refused to "tell anything about contributions to local campaigns." Whereupon Senator Reed threatens to have the recalcitrant witnesses reported to the United States senate, where they may be held in contempt of that august body.

Enough has been brought to light in Pennsylvania and in Illinois to make the public insistent on pitiless publicity. It is widely held that too much money was spent, though the amount of contributions is not necessarily illegal. In these suspicious circumstances, a flat refusal to bare the ramifications of the political sineys of war obviously can only heighten popular prejudice and lend itself to the worst possible construction. Rightly or wrongly, the public will conclude that there is something rotten if it cannot be told.

Paris cabarets sell champagne to Americans who have the price and the appetite. Parisians who have the appetite but not the price resent the public drinking by foreigners and may yet force the introduction of the hip flask as an incident of French gaiety. Circumstances have of late been strangely favorable to the introduction of American customs the world over. It would be unfortunate to find even our bad habits meeting with sauve encouragement.

Efficiency has struck the gambling casino at Monte Carlo. "Since our croUPIERS took a winter course in the Tailor method for saving unnecessary movements," says the casino manager, "the game has been sped up to such an extent that all records are broken by our tables." Efficiency in the croUPIERS is something, but they can't do it all. If the suckers could be persuaded to hand over their money without the business of betting and dealing they could be trimmed still more expeditiously.
