SENATOR UNDERWOOD'S MESSAGE

Senator Underwood, on the eve of his retirement from public life, has a message for the American people. It is this: The high rates of the Fordney-McCumber tariff must be reduced. If they are not reduced the world faces financial disaster. Those are not the words of an alarmist, but the carefully considered thought of an able and conservative man, richly experienced in the subject which he discusses. He is the author of the Underwood tariff bill of 1913, which abrogated the wretched Payne-Aldrich law, upon which the Taft administration floundered. He is not a free-trader, but the advocate of a scientific tariff system which produces revenue and which does not disturb the security of the American industry.

Senator Underwood speaks as a statesman when he reviews the changed conditions of international trade since the war, the transformation of this country from a debtor nation to a creditor nation, and the necessity of establishing some kind of balance between this country and Europe. What he tells the Post-Dispatch agrees in main outline, though it proceeds from an entirely different viewpoint, with the points made in the manifesto of bankers and industrialists of the United States and 14 European nations which was given out last week. It supplements other testimony which the Post-Dispatch has gathered from leading business men of the United States, namely, Benjamin Winchell, president Remington Typewriter Corporation; Jackson Johnson, chairman of the board of the International Agricultural Corporation; Edward A. Filene, president William Filene's Sons Co., Boston.

The whole burden of this testimony is that the present tariff law is unsound and uneconomic, whether viewed from within or from without. Business men say they do not need it, while statesmen and financiers say that it is a barrier to the restoration of the world's economic health. Senator Underwood points out that unless we lower the rates so European goods can come to this country on a reasonable basis, we can have no sound hope for a payment of Europe's debts to us.

The United States has cornered the world's gold reserve; it has gathered European securities, upon which Europe must pay interest; it has lent between 1920 and 1925, the sum of $50,000,000,000 to Europe; it has developed its shipping; it has cut off immigration. All of these things conspire to prevent Europe from getting on its feet and reduce that continent to the necessity of begging more money unless it can pay us in goods and services. The tariff law forestalls this way out. Thus, in Senator Underwood's opinion, it is only a question of time before the inexorable working of economic laws will force a financial catastrophe whose effects will react against us.

OUR FIVE-DOLLAR SNOOPERS

According to an Associated Press dispatch from Chicago, Prohibition Administrator Yellowly has extended the espionage system of the enforcement service by employing private informers at $5 a day, giving them no credentials, however, and, for the preservation of secrecy, forbidding them to appear at headquarters. Already, it is pridefully announced that by this method captures of illicit liquor to the value of $125,000 have been made.

It seems inconceivable to any self-respecting man that such a practice could have the sanction of the United States government. Whatever the zeal of the enforcement service may be, it is perfectly obvious that an undisciplined, wholly uncontrolled spying personnel must be recruited from the lowest and meanest characters, actuated by the basest of motives; and that such a system does infinitely more harm in abetting the satisfaction of private vengeance, and in stringing up suspicion and hatred, even, it may be, within the family circle, than can possibly be outweighed by the capture of illicit liquor.

The vicious nature of the practice is further emphasized in the fact that a commissioned official is forbidden to use evidence in a criminal case which he himself has obtained by fraud or deceit, in lieu of a search warrant, but evidence is usable if it finds its way into his hands from another, even though that other committed burglary to obtain it. In an organization which has tooped to the practices of the Prohibition Enforcement Service, it is not at all unlikely that private informers would be used in this manner to defeat the constitutional rights of citizens.

Quite aside from constitutional questions, however, the practice is essentially despicable, and is calculated only to bring the prohibition law and the government itself into greater contempt.

THANKSGIVING PUDDING

From California comes the statement that prohibition enforcement officers there have announced that a number of bakeries have received permits to use brandy, rum and other liquors because mincemeat, puddings and similar foods are classed as "food products." If this is so, such an interpretation of the law cannot be confined to the Pacific Coast. The East will be equally entitled to a restoration of the oldtime snappiness in mince pies and plum puddings. In view of the approach of Thanksgiving and Christmas the matter is one that seems deserving of an official pronouncement from Washington. But where will the brandy and rum come from, even if they can be legitimately used?

The time is almost here when it behooves every Democrat and independent voter to go to the polls and vote for Charles W. Bryan for governor. It is a well known fact that he made one of the best executives we ever possessed, ever on the alert to save the taxpayers money in every way he possibly could.

Dancing as a prerequisite to sports is being taught at the University of Wisconsin. Now the more serious minded students can work after hours without being called grinds.

IT ALL DEPENDS

Husbands versus careers is a subject which has been under discussion ever since women began to acquire the latter. Opinion is sharply divided as to whether a woman may have both or must choose between the two. One of America's best known and most successful women novelists has contended that it is perfectly possible to have both, not consecutively but coincidentally. Being the mother of several grown sons and still happily married to her first and only husband, she should speak with authority. But here comes a favorite of flimdom with the statement that husbands and careers don't mix. Having tried to mix husband with one career she also should know whereof she speaks.

There is no doubt that mixing a husband with a career is a delicate art, requiring a high degree of mental and spiritual dexterity. It is barely possible that the quality of the husband concerned may also have a little something to do with the feasibility of the proposition. Patience, unselfishness, pride in each other and a nice sense of relative values would seem indispensable to a successful result. These are qualities which not all husbands and wives, even if the latter are geniuses, possess. On the whole, the miscibility of husbands and careers evidently depends on who does the mixing.

THE NON-VOTER MENACE

It is an unusual thing for 50 per cent of the electorate to go to the polls in national, state, county or municipal elections, even when voting follows campaigns that mount to fever heat. And when pre-election days are devoid of excitement, bitterness or the expenditure of vast amounts of money "to get out the vote," balloting frequently is so light as to reduce the exercise of the franchise to a farce. This lack of sufficient number of men and women to express themselves through their ballots lies at the bottom of much that is wrong with present day government. If crooks get into office, obviously the good citizens who take no interest in selecting foolish laws, those otherwise good citizens who take no interest in selecting members of their legislatures must be largely to blame. So long as such men and women fail to exercise the franchise, they ought to feel a sense of responsibility and shame for every shortcoming of their government and for every scandal connected with it.

A FUTURE ORDER

Secretary Mellon, of the treasury department, who quits thinking about world finance but one in a while and applies his grey matter to the prohibition question has issued an order providing that liquor prescriptions hereafter will be good at any drug store in the country.

That is to say, a former order is eliminated, and physicians are no longer required to write down the name of the drug store where the prescription is to be filled.

To the friends and devotees of John Barleycorn this may sound passing good, but we fail to see wherein it is going to help the situation in Nebraska.

Out here the drug stores uniformly refuse to fill liquor prescriptions of any kind or character. It is one of the things that simply isn't done.

If it was the purpose of Mr. Mellon to make it easier for the folks who love that stuff that cheers, and sometimes inebriates, he has signally failed. Nothing short of an arbitrary order to Nebraska druggists to fill all liquor prescriptions, regardless of our own state laws, will bring joy to the liquor hounds in this commonwealth.

Keep Fit!

Good Health Requires Good Elimination

To be well, you must keep the blood stream free from impurities. If the kidneys lag, allowing body poisons to accumulate, a toxic condition is created. One is apt to feel dull, languid, tired and aching. A nagging backache is sometimes a symptom, with drowsy headaches and dizzy spells. That the kidneys are not functioning properly is often shown by burning or scanty passage of secretions. If you have reason to suspect improper kidney functioning, try Doan's Pills—a tested stimulant diuretic. Users praise them throughout the United States. Ask your neighbor!

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

In the matter of the application of Wm. Hunter, administrator of the estate of Cecelia D. Jahrig, deceased, for license to sell real estate to pay debts.
Now on this 23rd day of October, 1926, comes Wm. Hunter, administrator of the estate of Cecelia D. Jahrig, deceased, and presents his petition for license to sell the real estate of the deceased, to pay the claims filed and allowed against said estate; it appearing from said petition that there is an insufficient amount of personal property in the hands of the administrator to pay the claims presented and allowed by the County Court, the expense of administration and that it is necessary to sell the whole of said real estate of said deceased for the payment of claims and costs of administration—

It is therefore, considered, ordered and adjudged that all persons interested in the estate of Cecelia D. Jahrig, deceased, appear before me, James T. Begley, Judge of the District Court, at the office of the Clerk of the District Court at the Court House in the City of Plattsmouth, Cass County, Nebraska, on the 13th day of December, 1926, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon to show cause, if any there be, why such license should not be granted to Wm. Hunter, administrator of said estate, to sell all of said real estate of said deceased so as to pay claims presented and allowed with the costs of administration and the costs of this proceedings—

It is therefore further considered, ordered and adjudged that notice be given to all persons interested by publication of this Order to Show Cause for four successive weeks in The Plattsmouth Journal, a legal newspaper published at the hour of general circulation in said County of Cass, Nebraska.
By the Court.
