Golden Text: "Let us love one another, for love is of God."—I John, 4:7.

Building a Real Home
The home is the real unit of life in all its fullness, and is a symbol of Heaven, which it is intended to prepare us all for.

The home is the one plan which makes a place of refuge from the world, where there is true love and where the husband and father provided shelter, food, protection—and is the one responsible for the welfare, the protection, the health, the happiness of every other. There is no way that can bring success to the home except that be governed by love. The father must love the wife, must love the children, must provide for them a place to live, where they are protected from the things which bring harm and injury to the members one and all. The husband is entrusted with the welfare of the entire household, and is governed by the laws of God and all nature to cherish and protect the wife and the children. When the husband and father assumes the responsibility of providing for the members of his own household, he must realize that there is truth in that Scripture which says that "He who neglects to provide for the members of his own household has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for it. No man has a moral or other kind of right to take a woman from her home and to make a place to live without making that a love nest, for the habitation without love therein is not a home, but a harem. The home must be a place wherein all the member's interests and rights are sacred and are observed, for every child has a right to be well born and to a right surrounding and right influences in which to grow and reflect the image of him in whose likeness man was formed.

To know just our attitude to the other members of the family and to society in general, we would do well to stand aside and watch ourselves go by. This very appropriate poem was written by Edgar Guest:

Just stand aside and watch yourself go by;
Think of yourself as "he," instead of "I."

Note closely, as in other men you note
The bagged kneed trousers and the sandy coat.

Pick flaws for fault; forget the good you see;
And strive to make your estimate ring true.

Confront yourself, and look you in the eye,
Just stand aside and watch yourself go by.

Interpret all your motives just as though
You looked on one whose aims you did not know.

Let undisguised contempt surge through you
When you shirk, O commonest of men!

Despise your cowardice; condemn whatever
You note of falseness in you anywhere.

Defend not one defect that shames your eye,
Just stand aside and watch yourself go by.

And then, with eyes unveiled to what you loathe—
To sins that with sweet charity you'd clothe—

Back to your self walled tenement you'll go—
With tolerance for all who dwell here below.

The faults of others then will dwarf and shrink;
Love's eye will grow stronger by one mightier link—

When you have stood aside and watched yourself go by;
When you were "he" as substitute for "I."

Then does man get a slant at himself and his relationship to the other members of the family. A house can be built or purchased well equipped for living, with all modern conveniences, and with all things surrounding to make it more desirable to live in, but as Mr. Guest has written again in his verse on Home, "It takes a heap of livin' to make a house a home."

The floors are polished like mirrors, the walls are hung with the most modern of wall coverings, and every appointment is just as you would desire, with nothing to change, but as Mr. Guest has written again in the new domicile, and everything goes along like a marriage bell. Still it takes a few babies to be born before the house becomes a home. Merry laughter will add much to making the house a truly home; the love of one another, the love of the child, and each day adding much to the sacredness of the place and with every day, every week and every year the place is becoming more dear.

Joy is a very important part in making the place worth living in. Then, as it can not always go along here a long, and sickness comes, a little one, or perhaps the mother sickens, and there are long days and nights of watching by the bedside with constant ministrations to the loved one which makes it more dear.

It may be that health returns and it may be that on the other hand that the form wastes away and finally the last sad and laboured breaths come and the life which we prized so much has gone, the soul having left its tenement of clay for the other and much brighter shore. The watching and suffering has hallowed the home and has made the place one step nearer a home. "For it takes a heap of livin' to make a house a home."

The wife also has her place in the home, and that is to love the husband and father, for the matter of taking the gift of God, in the shape of a little child and building it into manhood and womanhood is no little task, and requires the combined efforts of both the husband and wife, the father and the mother to inculcate in the minds of the child reverence for the God who gave it life, and to become a good citizen and member of society. The job is big enough for the combined energies of the two and one cannot do the job as it should be done without the help of the other.

Again, children, you should know your place in the home, for the father and mother have provided a place for you to live, they have supplied you with food and clothing, have protected you from the heat and the cold and from all other dangers. Their love has made it possible for you to enjoy in its fullness all the joys of a home blessed by the gifts of Almighty God. Know in its fullness the meaning of the first commandment with its glorious promise, "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land which thy God giveth thee." This means that there is a right way of living and a wrong way of living.

We believe that we should dwell peaceably with all men as far as it is possible, but give me the loyal lad who will not stand idly by and hear some one deride his father or his mother and who would rather take a kicking if such must be, rather than hear some one abuse the dear-est friends he has on earth, his parents, for there are none dearer. The manly lad who would rather fight even if he knew he was to get the worst of the combat when it is a good cause rather than to allow the rights of others and especially his dearest friends trampled down. Ever champion the cause of right and the side of the downtrodden even at the risk of suffering some hard usage yourself. Again I say, be peaceful with all people as far as it is possible, but do not sacrifice principle and right for peace, at the price of honor and principle, is no peace.
