Charles D. St. John has a hound dog who does not know that there is a law against killing the opossum, and having a love for order and the observance of the proper decorum of all animals around his master's home, when a Mrs. O'possum with his family of six came to visit the hen roosts of Mr. St. John, the dog asked why the evening call. The opossum demurred in answering, and a battle ensued with the result that there were seven dead opossums and no regrets by the dog. This was unknown to Mr. St. John until after the demise of the opossum family. However, the chickens are safe.

Did Not Want the Bug

One of the excellent farmers living northeast of Nehawka discovered some potato bugs and thinking there were but a few offered his son and daughters five cents per dozen for all they might gather. Now do not think they did not get the bugs, for they did, and it cost the father five dollars and seventy cents for what the son gathered, and four dollars and forty cents for those the daughter picked.

The Sheep and the Goats.

Two very good friends and neighbors in Nehawka, both had chickens and while each could stand what their own chickens did in scratching in their own gardens, thought it best to build a fence to separate the sheep and to keep the goats and sheep apart. 'Better Homes' is Slogan of the Women's Clubs

Mrs. W. B. Pate of Peru Has Strong Article on the Work of the Campaign in State.

"Home-keeping should be a profession, and the housewife should be the manager of the corporation and assign tasks and duties to members of the household, the same as is done in business," Mrs. W. B. Pate of Peru wrote in an article prepared for the Better Homes campaign of the Nebraska Federation of Women's clubs.

Mrs. Pate is the wife of the president of the Peru Teachers' College and is active in Federation work.

Following is her article, entitled "Better Homes for All Classes."

By Mrs. W. B. Pate.

By "Better Homes" we do not mean that they must be large and luxuriously furnished houses; neither do we mean homes of educated people only, for an untrained mind may possess a vastly broader view and understanding of people and life than a many "degreed" person.

"And how," do you ask, "may this be accomplished?" The answer is first, "By precept," and fortunate is the person who has been reared in a home where these principles prevailed. Often times an admired friend, neighbor or acquaintance is responsible for the acquirement of these desirable traits of character, for who is not influenced by a family circle where comradeship and harmony between its members exist? Happiness radiates from every face.

"A good beginning is half done" we are told, therefore, to promote better homes the value of home ownership cannot be overestimated. This is another opportunity for character development and cooperation for in the majority of cases it takes determination, economy, thrift and even sacrifice by all members of the family to possess a home.

There is a great degree of satisfaction and pardonable pride in being a property owner. One's interest is increased a hundred-fold with the realization that the improvements and conveniences paid for, and energy put forth for beautifying the grounds, etc., is a permanent investment for one's self, and the money expended for its upkeep is really a savings account; while rent paid is entered in the "loss" column and sooner or later will result in indifference, resignation to useless expenditure or discouragement.

The acceptance by all of "Home-making, a Profession" advanced by the N. F. W. C. would go far to raise the standard of American homes. It adds dignity and respect to housework. With the housewife certain she has an inherent ability for details—the home would be operated as other vocations or corporations are; that is, the house would be conveniently arranged, labor saving devices and equipment installed; it would be brightly and cozily furnished; placed upon a business basis, and, instead of the entire responsibility and labor of the "establishment" falling upon the "manager" there would be assistants—employees, if you prefer—even though none other than the members of the family who realize they have a share in its interests and responsibilities as well as its pleasures.

This division of home work not only saves mother's strength but leaves her time for recreation, self-improvement and community work which are essential to her development and happiness for "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." The income is budgeted. First, by the husband and wife. The children when very young should be given a small but definite allowance and be schooled in its distribution for their various needs, a "person's children" which they can use for their own pleasure, and a "savings" account being included. It takes experience (as a recent speaker had said) to make a budget "budget." When older, confidence is placed in them by consulting them in the apportioning of the family funds, not only educational in finances ad begets thrift, but the co-partnership plan also enriches characters; makes them considerate and fair with others—for each must take his "turn" in purchases—and results in self-denial and a closer relationship, sympathy and understanding between members of the family which is worth much to them in their own future homes.

The impressions of childhood are lasting; the way father and mother did—right or wrong—is almost invariably followed in the later life. How necessary it is, then, for parents to always act in a fair and broad-minded manner. When a child asks: "Why?" don't say: "Because I said so!"

And who can deny that pleasant remembrances will not cause absent brother or sister to "Stop, Look, Listen!" when the time comes to decide questions for themselves, where indifference has crept in, cares and worries seem overwhelming, followed perhaps by discouragement? Then, what a bright silver lining the cloud has, when a package unexpectedly arrives from home! But no greater is the joy over the home box, than mother's when a letter comes from an absent one, or a little package comes "For Mother Dear."

Farmers' Taxes a Third of Profit

Thirty Three Per Cent Net Income Is Eaten by Revenue in the Last Three Years.

New York.—During the last three years agriculture in the United States paid taxes amounting to 33.1 per cent of its net profits, the national industrial conference board announced Sunday.

A study made by the board disclosed that period averaged nearly three times more than the last three prewar years. During 1912, 1913 and 1914 taxes absorbed an average of 11.2 per cent of the total net farm profits, the report said.

"How acute a crisis American agriculture has passed through in recent years," the report said, "is reflected in the fact that in 1920-21 taxes collected from farms amounted to nearly six times the total net profit from all farms. In 1921-22 there was considerable improvement in the agricultural situation generally, but taxes still absorbed 77.7 per cent of the net profits. Since then the burden has grown lighter from year to year, until in 1925-26 only 30.4 per cent of the total agricultural net profits had to be paid out in taxes.

The survey showed taxes levied on agriculture amounted to $890,000,000 in 1925-26 against $315,000,000 in 1913. In the last crop year net profits were given as $2,930,000,000 about the same as in 1923.

Tax relief played only a small part in easing the tax burden, the board said. The survey showed that it had come about primarily as a result of better prices and the resulting bigger net profits for agricultural products. The study pointed out that the real tax problem in regard to agriculture is not the tax burden, but the farmer's income fluctuates greatly from year to year, while the tax bill remains on the same level, whether the income for the years is large or small.

"Thus tax payments which were hardly felt in 1919 constituted a crushing burden in 1922," the report said.

The farmers have derived little direct benefit from federal tax reduction, according to the survey which pointed out that practically all their tax bills are property taxes collected by state and local governments, which with few exceptions have been continuously increasing their levies.
