What man has done woman thinks she is qualified to improve upon.

Some of our party lines, especially the rural ones are as democratic as our wish.

A Michigan girl killed a bear with a rolling pin. What a nice, marriageable companion!

Mr. Coolidge might vary the monotony of wormfishing for trout by shooting a few fox.

A heating radiator has been invented that will burn any kind of oil not too heavy to flow.

A New York man holds more than 1,000 patents but we'll bet flies get in through his screen doors just the same.

Instead of investigating the Paris divorce courts the authorities would do well to examine some of the Americans who apply.

"British question rights of U. S. to same size navy." What does the British want the whole earth and a slice of the moon?

A woman has been attached to the General Staff of the United States Army, which will strike most married men as being scientific.

Eight cents here and $1,500,000 there, and a proposed increase in gas rates as a possibility. The consumer as usual is being consumed.

Supreme court decision do not concern themselves with results. That is for the litigants to consider. When it comes to interpretations of laws and amendments, then the country sits up and listens.

It doesn't require much practice to acquire the art of being lazy.

The only fault we can find with Colonel Lindbergh is that poetry.

The question persists: Are the echoes very low-down the Black Hills?

The height of despair is not easily measured but the depth is readily sounded.

He'll not really be famous until they find out his name's not Lindbergh after all.

A man carrying a baby looks as much out of place as a mule hitched to a top buggy.

Our notion of utility is the Ponce-Winnecke comet, making 18 1/2 miles a second and going nowhere.

Lindbergh's reply to President Coolidge counted 106 words. Mr. Dawes would like to have that fellow in the senate.

Motion picture actors will not submit passively to wholesale slashes in salaries, as outlined recently by several big producers.

Nearly every well-fed man goes around these days with a little cherry pie on his shirt front. He wants the neighbors to know.

The administration's patience is giving way to displeasure over alleged British attempts to sidetrack the Geneva conference.

Who said there is no new thought under the sun? A Memphis preacher writes to say he is opposed to Sunday baseball because his work on that day keeps him from going to the games.

Bobbed hair reminds us that someone should start a collection of hairpins and hampers before they disappear from the earth.

Overland township, Morris county, Kansas, reported 57 dogs and only seven watches for assessment. Still, the dogs probably were watch dogs.

As to taxes it all depends upon what pocket it is taken out of; that is as to what name is given to it. All reach the treasury just the same.

However, it should be understood that Col. Charles Lindbergh and "Slim" Lindbergh are still, and will continue to be, one and the same person.

The tariff of the Irish Free State is going some. This permits but two ships to enter free of duty. But we Americans understand and look pleasant.

"Coolidge Tells of U. S. Shortcomings"—Headline. One of these shortcomings, in the imperial Democratic view, is the G. O. P. president's long stayings.

The First National Bank at Farmerville, Ill., organized in 1910, failed to open its doors June 27, and is now in the hands of the National bank examiners.

An all-around scaling down of power without disturbing the 5-5-3 ratio is the aim of the British proposals to the Geneva conference on naval disarmament.

Two thousand American tourists are arriving in England every day. They are all usually well provided with bank drafts. We thus help Europe to pay its debts.

A Chicago chiropractor who broke a woman's back has been arrested because he has no state license. If he had had a license the back breaking probably would have been all right.

Gibson has not yet been approached by Viscount Salto concerning the reported project for a perpetual peace pact between Japan and the United States, but it is understood that any suggestion from the Japanese along this line will receive earnest consideration from the American delegation.

LINDBERGH A LEGEND

Old Greece mythology had a character named Antaeus who kept his great strength only by continued contact with the earth. As long as he kept his feet on the soil he was invincible. When he lost contact with the earth, however, as when Hercules held him in the air and pummeled him, he became weak.

Lindbergh, apparently, is the direct antithesis of Antaeus. He needs to soar up into the empty air every now and then to regain his energy.

The first few days Lindbergh spent in America on his return from France were pretty strenuous. Indeed, it became observed that the young man was under quite a strain. He was growing faintly irritable, was losing something of the boyish freshness of his engaging grin.

At all events, Lindbergh, at the end of his second day in New York found himself at his front door an hour after midnight. He was tired, glad to be alone in the cool night. In the house was a bed and the assurance that he might sleep as late as he wished.

What did he do? Did he go to that bed and sink down with a sigh of relief?

He did not. Instead he headed for Roosevelt field, borrowed a plane, flew to Washington, got his own plane, the Spirit of St. Louis, flew back, and then amused himself for half an hour by cutting aerial capers high over the heads of the mechanics below.

Then, when he finally came down, Lindbergh was himself once more. He was jovial, cheerful, carefree. He laughed and chattered with the reporters, who had tired his patience rather severely the day before. He seemed at peace with the world and everybody in it. He had, it seemed, renewed his strength by his contact with the open sky.

And it is just that trait, we believe, that puts the finishing touch on this young hero. It relates him to the eagle, wheeling and circling high above the time-stained, car-worn earth. We felt all along, as we read of his feat, that this lad was cast in a mold different from ours; that he was somehow a child of the air, darting, soaring inhabitant of a realm clearer and freer than our own; and this, somehow proves it.

Lindbergh is rapidly becoming a legend. For all our matter-of-fact appurtenances of modernity—our newspapers, our telegraph wires, our photographs, and our general skepticism—he is in a fair way of being transmitted, before our eyes, into an unreal, almost fictional creature of myth and fancy; a being who is more at home in the air than on earth, and leaves this earth for some untried sphere on the other side of the moon. And that is as it should be. We have too few legends, too few mythical heroes. We are tied down, and we need a Knight of the Upper Air.

Lindbergh it is. Hall Lindbergh!

STUDY OF HUMAN NATURE

If you want to obtain a good idea of the hurry of the present era, a railroad crossing just as the signal bell is sounded for a gate to come down is an excellent place.

An instance like this happened one day, the signal was given and two outstanding incidents occurred. One driver accelerated his speed and reached the other side just as the gates came down; he made it but had only a fraction of a second to spare.

The other incident was of a driver who in his desire to get as near the train as possible in order that he might not lose any time when the gates were lifted drove too far; he was right under the gates and had to go back about ten feet.

Now these are only small matters, but they are a good indication of what is happening dozens of times every day; they also prove the truth of the assertion we have made that only too many seem to think that seconds count in reaching their destination, regardless of the possibility that they may have months to repent in some hospital, or the alternative that they may never know what did take them out of this world.

Nearagua has been given to understand implicitly that no more wars will be allowed down there until they are first passed on by Uncle Sam. If any faction has an idea for a war it must first draw up a general sketch of it and forward it to Washington. Colonel Stinson has been made a sort of high commissioner of wars or something, and will look the proposed war over and decidew hether it can be made to pay. No revolution can be operated without a permit, and all revolutionists must be able to show both registration cards and operators' licenses.

There are more than 1 million laws in force in the United States. Another one is evidently needed, making murder illegal in Chicago.

AMERICAN AVIATORS

Fliers in this country are proving themselves master of the air in expertness with flying machines. Twice in a little more than a fortnight two aviators have driven their planes across the Atlantic and landed them on European soil. Chapt. Charles A. Lindbergh flying from New York to Paris, and Mr. Chamberlin, with his backer, Mr. Levine, almost to the German capital.

Naturally the flight of Capt. Lindbergh claimed most attention and his success was cheered loudest. He was first to accomplish the great feat of crossing the ocean without a stop. Arthur Brisbane, in his comment on the air flights, makes the following inquiries:

"What will military and naval gentlemen say now about their theory that 'the airplane is no real menace to this country.' Out of two attempts to fly across the ocean by American fliers both succeeded.

"What would be the probable percentage if five thousand foreign aviators, with full government backing and unlimited expenditure of money, should fly the other way on a hostile errand?"

The New York Post, owned by Cyrus H. K. Curtis, says: "These two flights show a new war menace and the fight assumed in the opinion of military officials the cloak of military menace, emphasizing the need for adequate air defense."

While most people have long recognized the possibilities of aircraft in war, few will be ready to assume that the accomplishments of Capt. Lindbergh and Mr. Chamberlin will in any way hasten the menace airplanes may add to the slaughter following the trail of war.

As a result it is not probable that any considerable number of people will think of war when they chance to recall the ocean flights. Their attention—their thought—will be centered on the splendiddness of the accomplishments of the men who dared death to establish their beliefs that they could span the ocean in a single flight.

The achievements of Lindbergh and Chamberlin will very largely concentrate thought on both sides of the ocean upon aviation in general as a commercial proposition and not as a war possibility. As another has said:

"What was done by both planes points the way to advancement of the cause of flying, not as a war possibility." And as another has said:

"What was done by both planes points the way to advancement of the cause of flying, not in military but in commercial lines. The Balancing plane carried a passenger and also had demonstrated the mighty possibilities of the future of aviation."

Statistics show that more divorces are obtained in the third year of marriage than in any other. The rule seems to be, three years and out.

A Word With the Old Folks

Elderly People Are Learning Importance of Good Elimination.

IN the later years of life there is apt to be a slowing up of the bodily functions. Good elimination, however, is just as essential to the old as to the young. Many old folks have learned the value of Doan's Pills when a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys is required. Scanty or burning passages of kidney secretions are often signs of improper kidney function. In most every community are scores of users and endorsers who acclaim the merit of Doan's. Ask your neighbor!
