BEER IS BEER

Recently one of the familles residing in the city decided that they would like to have some home made beverage that might temper the hot weather with a cooling drink and accordingly the young son of the family was sent down into the main parts of trade of the city with instructions as to the purchase of some root beer extract. The boy called at one of the stores and being approached by the gentlemanly clerk made his wants known as to securing the root beer basis. The package was handed the boy and he was soon on his way homeward and on arrival there the package was opened with the greatest of joy in anticipation of the flagons of root beer that would soon be bubbling forth. The surprise of the family can be imagined when it was found that the boy had been given a can of malt extract. The clerk had the right idea but was a little off on the amount of kick that the family desired. There was considerable fun over the incident among the members of the family and who are now preparing to cultivate the acquaintance of the clerk who evidently knows
