A YACHT'S RECORD VOYAGE

The feat of the sixteen-ton American schooner yacht Nicanor, which has just made passage from Boston to Falmouth, England, in twenty days and seven hours, a new record for a craft of her size, is but one of several recent developments which bear witness that notwithstanding man's increasing reliance on modern inventions he has by no means lost his skill in the primitive arts and crafts.

Our use of machinery and intricate apparatus has not made us effete; while we depend on steamships and are looking to airplanes for quick trans-Atlantic passage we are not helpless without them. We still know how to sail ships skillfully and are even beating our ancestors at their own game by sending a yacht across the ocean in faster time than they ever sailed a ship equally small. If there were need of it we probably would be able to break the record for the trans-Atlantic passage by great sailing vessels like the clipper Drednaught which in 1869 made the crossing in twelve days. The Drednaught was a craft of 1,443 gross tons.

There is no incentive to establish new sailing records except the sport of it and the satisfaction that is to be found in thus proving that the human race has not been rendered incapable by the advance civilization of making good use of the kind of craft utilized by our forefathers in traveling over the sea. Hence there is scant likelihood that any attempt will be made to surpass the Drednaught's feat. But the Nicanor's accomplishments suggest that we might be able to do so if we were so disposed.

There is cause for pride in the reflection that we are not only able to do things better than our ancestors because of having available modern inventions but also can excel by employing their own methods.

LOWMAN'S TEMPERANCE SPEECH

Assistant Secretary Lowman, successor of Gen. Andrews as head of prohibition enforcement, spoke publicly in Philadelphia the other day for the first time since assuming the office. He spoke with restraint and discretion. He gave it as his judgment that prohibition has accomplished some good, but frankly acknowledged that there is "a wide difference of opinion as to the success or failure of this great venture in government policy." He was no less candid in asserting that the only sure foundation for temperance lies in education and the personal conviction of the individual.

Such a statement is in refreshing contrast to the rhapsodizing of Maj. Roy Haynes, to the stern, accusing belligerency of Mr. Wayne Wheeler, and to the pietistic smugness of many other spokesmen. It is also preferable to the swaggering, military cocksureness of his immediate predecessor's earliest communiques.

Certainly Mr. Lowman is temperate in speech. That in itself is an admirable virtue. As an official policy it is likely, we think, to help the cause of prohibition; it surely won't hurt it.

An English woman is building a motor speedboat in which she says she will cross the Atlantic in fifty-five hours. That's too fast. A fellow wants to have enough time to enjoy the trip after he gets through being seasick.

Lots and lots of times, when father speaks of him as an incorrigible young man, the neighbors call the boy a chip off the old block.

ASTO FILIPINOS INDEPENDENCE

The Manila Chamber of Commerce has been interested in the Institute of Pacific Relations in the matter of Philippine independence, and has cabled that body asking that they pass a resolution asking congress to provide a constitutional amendment giving independence to the people of the Philippines. Just what this has to do with the islands and the United States is not stated, for no Pacific relation are involved, but Filipinos have the idea that this Honolulu conference by its affirmative course might influence our congress to get busy and set the islands free. However, there are two propositions connected therewith. One is that congress can only propose a constitutional amendment; the other is that three-fourths of the states must ratify such an amendment. There is also another, in that generally speaking the people of this country have not taken any particular interest one way or the other, unless it be that they are perfectly willing to grant Philippine independence just as soon as the islanders show they are fit to set as an independent nation.

But no addition to our constitution is necessary for any such purpose. Congress has it within its power to grant this independence at the drop of the hat, provided a sufficient number vote for it, and congress is not yet convinced the islanders should set up for themselves, for but very little evidence has been visible that our country should turn them loose. Some of the official actions of the island legislature have shown this, for the record does not set in that way.

There is no question but that both the people and congress would be glad to get rid of the islands, but this independence would be a sorry gift, for the exploiters, who are of their own numbers, would take speedy control and misgovernment would invite chaos, with likely seizure by Japan. But if not that, our government would in the interests of a common humanity, be forced to intervene and restore order. However, this would not be to our liking, for if we once get out, we shall want to stay out for good. There will be no desire to return.

It is all up to the Philippine people themselves. By their actions will depend our course.

WHO SHALL CONTROL RADIO?

At the next Congress a reopening of the fight to vest the control of radio in an independent commission rather than in the Department of Commerce appears to be a certainty. The present law represents a compromise between the advocates of commission and department control. It vests the Radio Commission with full power to regulate broadcasting for one year, after which this authority will pass to the Secretary of Commerce. The commission will continue in existence thereafter, but it will meet only from time to time to consider the appeals of broadcasters from the decision of the Department of Commerce.

The Radio Commission has rendered excellent service in taking the chaos out of broadcasting. It now has little more to do than watch the results of its work for the rest of its term and make minor revisions. Most of its duties will be of a routine character, and there is no reason for extending its regulative powers for an indefinite period. It will still exist as an appellate board, and that is all that is needed.

The movement to perpetuate the commission as a regulative body has developed among certain senators who dislike the control of radio by the Department of Commerce because they are intensely jealous of Secretary Hoover. They fear that his control of radio will enhance his political prestige. Senator Watson, the chief advocate of control by a permanent commission, cherishes presidential ambitions himself, and it is a bit significant that he seeks to take away from Mr. Hoover his jurisdiction not only over radio but also over aviation.

Senator Curtis is a right cautious sort of fellow. When asked to comment on the president's "choice" not to be a candidate for the White house job in 1928, he said he wouldn't consider saying a word until he had read the entire presidential announcement. This, we think, he could do easily at one sitting. The reading of it, senator, is not so hard, but interpretation thereof is rough on rats.

Senator LaFollette is credited with saying that the next congress would be full of investigations. But how about one to investigate the right of members to wear the party titles of those who do not belong to them?—Sept lightly writes.

It seems to take a good deal of type, either to get the Stillmans married or to keep them that way.

A SLUSH-FUND ECHO

The Republican machine in Missouri, operated by Dr. Clements, ex-Gov. Hyde and Asa Butler of Kansas City, is kindly disposed to Vice President Dawes and testing party sentiment to determine whether and when it might be safe to make it a bandwagon movement. This is interesting. No less interesting, in a way, is the machine's reputed coolness to Mr. Lowden's candidacy because of the unhappy slush-fund recollection of eight years ago.

Yet with the exception of the "gold dust twins," the men who handled Mr. Lowden's money in Missouri never suffered party reprimand or rebuke, state or national. Quite to
