Was Uriah, who it might have been, had a suspicion of the things when he was called home on a pretext, that he might cover the sins which the two had committed, but he would not go and enjoy the home when his fellows in the army were compelled to take the rough fare of the field, and he slept at the gate of the palace of the king, and returned to the battle field leaving the two to bear their sin. When David sent word for Jeab to place Uriah in the forefront of the fight that he might be killed, he perhaps little cared for his home and his happiness was gone, and he thought he might die fighting for the cause of the nation and his fellow man. He was a Hittite and not a Israelite, still he proved himhis king in this matter.
