Edsel Ford says among other things it is to be a "handsome car."

Children should make an effort to train up their parents in the way they should go.

The real tragedy will be when some of those Model-T's also choose not to run in 1928.

A popular cafe in Paris has barred women pipe smokers. Guess the ladies will have to take to cigars.

Don't make a fool of yourself if you are a man; there are lots of women who will do that much better.

If a woman is jealous of her husband it usually keeps her so busy that she hasn't much time for anything else.

Social Note: Several prospective tenants are considering the White House, now that the new roof has been completed.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has raised the question whether it will be either feasible or wise to continue to furnish college education to all applicants at only a fraction of its cost.

A film actress has divorced her husband because he was "the roughest man she ever saw" and he has been ordered to pay her $52.90 at the rate of $200 a week. We always did hear that it paid to be polite.

There is considerable dissatisfaction in the literary world with a recent decision by the federal internal revenue department concerning the taxation of authors' royalties under the provisions of the income tax law.

Senator James Couzens, of Michigan, says there isn't enough work connected with his job to keep him busy, and that he is paid too much for his services. We have suspected that concerning all Senators for some time.

Resigning from the League of Nations on the eve of its annual session, Henry De Jouvenal, France's political delegate, gives as his reason the fact that the chief powers have made agreement without consulting the less powerful members.

Women are jealous of echoes because they get the last word.

Spending your vacation is another term for spending your money.

With shifting scenes many a pretended friend shows up as an enemy.

The idea of having censors of our public affairs seems to be growing popular.

Several doughboys are en route to Paris. This is their second attempt to see a little of France.

Americans certainly are drinking less than they used to. Imports of tea fell off a million pounds last year.

One man we know of took up golf to improve his health. Now he's looking for some other game to improve his morals.

The former Kaiser advised the German flyers concerning their flight to America. We hope he's better on flights than he is on marches.

A ranger in Africa reports he killed three elephants with one bullet. We live in a machine age, it's true, but the spirit of Aesop has not passed from the earth.

When Mr. Coolidge donned chaps on his birthday he little realized that he was establishing a precedent for men who are presidential candidates in spite of themselves.

The gasoline tax is becoming a tremendous factor in the building and maintaining of roads. In 1919 only four states had imposed this tax, the total collections being little more than one million dollars.

To prevent graft and theft, the government has put green dye into all gasoline used in the Panama Canal Zone. Better be tinting up the capitol dome—a new bunch of congressmen are coming in soon.

It seems President Coolidge thinks our four greatest presidents were Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt. These words were spoken on the Rushmore mountain memorial. On the face of this will be carved four statues of these presidents.

Social Note: Mayor Jimmy Walkers, of New York, has returned for a visit to his ancestral home in Ireland. There hasn't been much doing around New York lately, the Atlantic ocean having been pretty well down.

A bungalow colony, with a swimming pool and everything, is being established in Death Valley. Maybe Commander Byrd could sell some of the folks around the south pole some of the new electric refrigerators. Especially the one Bob Hubbard sent 'em.

The workings of the new banking laws proved very beneficial. The federal reserve banks have been materially strengthened, and as well the national banking system. This was doubted at first by some, but realization proved their mistake. It was judicious legislation.

Science is always reporting the discovery of something new that really isn't new. The latest reported find is a South American insect with a white light on its head and a red light on its tail. They've been sending millions of insects of that sort out of Detroit for a goodly number of years.

It is stated that the Veterans' Bureau at Washington that the failure of war veterans keep up their war risk insurance will lose them about $26,000,000,000. These figures are not a typographical error. It is thirty-six billion. And that is about as much as it cost us to fight the blooming war.

The question of abolishing the $2 bill has come up in connection with the new issue of shorter $1 bills, but is likely to be settled by the retention of the allegedly unpopular two-spot. The principle reason for their unpopularity with us is their scarcity in the place where we think they would do the most good.

The Germans say they are going to make their Dawes plan payments and the French say that they are going to pay the American debt just as rapidly as they can when Germany pays, and everyone in the United States will be glad of any kind of payment, inasmuch as this nation is at present the great international bag-holder.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt has no fear of offending her sex, and from her long career in the work of emancipating women has become full of convictions of their faults and failings. Mrs. Catt is reported to have said that "women are trouble-makers," that "they have caused more irritation between nations than any other influence in history." If a man had said this so that Mrs. Catt could have heard it, would the good lady have risen up in indignation and protested, or would she have affirmed?

THAT CRYPTIC COOLIDGE STATEMENT

From the opinion as expressed by some prominent figure in politics it would seem the cryptic statement of President Coolidge that he did not choose to run for president in 1928, is not being taken as seriously as perhaps intended. Other leaders say the president meant just what he said, and that he had no idea of a convention nomination being tendered him. Then there are such prominent men of the type of Senator LaFollette, who do not take the president at his word as to not being a candidate. One statement is that the president should make his purpose clearer, and say whether or not he would accept a nomination from the national convention if tendered to him unanimously. This statement, said that this nomination might come to him if the convention passed into a dead-lock stage. This view is natural enough, and only a direct Coolidge statement could settle it, but is it necessary? How many think not?

Chairman Butler of the Republican national committee might be held as partly responsible for doubts raised that perhaps after all the purpose of the president was to give everyone seeking a nomination every opportunity to see what he could do in an open convention, then in the end if no nomination were possible, to accept the nomination if the convention so expressed its wish. What Chairman Butler said was that he believed the next Republican convention would nominate President Coolidge despite his statement that he did not choose to run for president in 1928, and insist upon his acceptance. Mr. Butler did not doubt the sincerity of the statement, but thought despite the president's wish not to be a candidate, the convention would nominate him and insist upon an acceptance.

Other statements made, take Mr. Coolidge at his word and are inclined to regard the matter so far as Mr. Coolidge is concerned as a closed incident. Perhaps the real truth is the president, realizing the responsibility and care of his high office, does not care to become president again.

LOOKING FOR WORK

Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, and Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi, are seldom in agreement on any subject claiming the attention of the upper house of congress. They usually "travel" at cross purposes so far as legislation is concerned. The good news by the Utah solon in legislative proposals always had a bad side when offered to the Mississippian. For once they are united. Each is urging President Coolidge to call a special session of congress.

They are anxious to get busy. They are hunting for something to do. They have had their vacation and want to get back to their jobs at the national capitol. Each feels that he can do better work when congress is in session.

Senator Smoot wants the President to call the law-making body to Washington about November 1. Senator Harrison believes an earlier date would do no harm. The Milwaukee Sentinel says:

"There is a good deal to be said for the proposal to convene congress a month or so ahead of the regular session. Congress is confronted with a large and important program, including flood control, tax reduction, farm relief and even tariff revision, if Pat Harrison has his way. The point is made that the regular session is too brief to enable congress to cope intelligently with the great public questions awaiting legislative action.

"A short session may not afford room for well considered legislation. On the other hand, for effect that a long session is not necessarily productive of good legislation. In fact, it might even be argued that congress will do more work and play less politics if it knows that its time is limited.

"The country will appreciate Pat Harrison's devotion to the public welfare which prompts him to cut short his much needed vacation in order to get an early start. The only drawback to congressional eagerness is the fact that many congressmen are almost to eager in clamoring for a chance to 'get to work.'"

The fact that Lindbergh has called his story "We" instead of "I," and has given some credit to his plane, instead of taking it all for himself, calls attention to the injustice which other writers have committed in this regard.

St. Joseph, Mo., takes its place in the headlines as the first city in the United States to have a municipally-owned and operated airport meeting the requirements of the aviation branch of the United States Department of Commerce.

THE UPWARD LOOK

It is nearly nine years since the end of the world war. A decade does much. It wears away rough and jagged places, it heals wounds and soothes fears and abates hatreds. Europe today is not the Europe of yesterday. Even twelve months have done much to kill war psychology which lingered long after the last gun had been fired.

Sir Arthur Willet, of the British foreign office, presents an encouraging and convincing picture of Europe. He has comparatively little to say of his own country, a great deal to say of Germany and France, and the other continental nations which have most persistently cherished the war animosities. In all these lands the people today are looking forward toward happiness and not backward toward hate and horror. As a result, a solid and advantageous understanding is steadily developing, and this understanding is that only in a forgetfulness of war can there be a safe assurance of future peace and happiness.

In this understanding the nations are making progress toward economic stability. The world is a better world and it's getting better and better.

These are not the empty effusions of a professional optimist, but the conclusions of a studious observer and a conservative statesman.

This is the best address yet made at the present session of the American Institute of Politics. Sir Arthur Willet has done a good service, and has earned the thanks of Americans who like to be told agreeable truths.

HAIR AND ADVERTISING

The vice president of a great advertising concern in New York has just notified the country that ladies with blond or red hair are certain to be fops in the advertising game.

With all respect to this gentleman's sincerity, we fear that he has not included in his investigation a study of history. Had he done this, we believe he would have discovered that red-heads have always been adept at advertising their places and periods. There was Sappho, for instance, and there was Pompadour. And then there was the beautiful Helen, without question the greatest advertising asset a nation ever had. Everybody will agree that it is impossible to imagine heroic Greece without that red-headed charmer as it would be to imagine the Napoleonic era without Napoleon, the automobile era without Ford or the Cardinal era without Hornsby and Frisch. And if contemporary history may be drawn on, what woman of the day is the advertising equal of Almee McPherson, another flaming-haired lady?

We are without data which to refute the advertising gentleman's strictures on blondes. But since he has been far wrong about red-heads, wouldn't it be only justice to give the light-haired ladies the benefit of the doubt?

Now the dentists come out and say men howl more than women when the grinding and yanking is going on. No wonder. Did you ever see a man go up to his dentist and as a form of preventive insurance, flash him a vampire smile while murmuring, oh so trustfully, "Now, doctor, I just know you'll be nice and gentle and won't hurt me at all."

The Irish are taking parliamentarianism at its word. After a general election last June, a parliamentary vote in which the government escaped overthrow only by the breaking of a tie in the dail, and two by-elections which the government surprisingly won, there is to be another general election in September.
