A JOB FOR THEODORE

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., announces that the election in New York was not an Al Smith victory. The voters passed enthusiastically the eight amendments which Al favored, and they defeated by 400,000 the one which he opposed. But Theodore Jr., is, nevertheless, able to figure that it was not an Al Smith victory.

The boy grows more wonderful as time passes. Some years ago he figured that the war whose end he celebrated today was won exclusively by Republicans, so that Armistice day should by rights be a strictly Republican holiday. That was marvelous, but figuring that Al Smith's didn't win is even more so.

Such talent should not be permitted to go unused. Give young Theodore a pad, a pencil and 15 minutes and he will figure for you how the British lost the battles of Waterloo and Trafalgar, how the Indian Sepoys won and the Spanish Armada was completely successful. To such a man it should be easy to prove that Long Island and Bladensburg were great American victories, for facts apparently do not even annoy, much less obstruct him.

Teddy Jr., is wasted in New York politics, but there is a great task waiting for him elsewhere. He is obviously the very man to write "Big Bill" Thompson's history of the United States.

SUCH IS FAME

A story—and it's a good one, too—going the rounds to the effect that a few years ago Harvey S. Firestone, Henry Ford, Thomas A. Edison and John Burroughs were touring through West Virginia. A light on their car went bad and they stopped at a little crossroads store in the Buckingham section. Mr. Ford went into the store to make the purchase.

"What kind of automobile gibbs do you have?"

"Edison," replied the merchant.

"I'll take one," said Ford, "and you may be interested to know that Mr. Edison is out in my car."

"So?" said the merchant.

"When the light was put in it was found that a new tire was needed, so Ford went back to the store and asked what kind of tires the merchant had."

"Firestone," was the reply.

"By the way, you may be interested to know that Mr. Firestone is out in my car, and that I am Mr. Ford—Henry Ford."

"So?" said the merchant, and let drive a long squirt of tobacco against the wall.

While the merchant was putting on the tire, Burroughs, who had white whiskers, leaned out of the car and said, "Good morning, sir."

The merchant looked up at him with a grin of sarcasm, and said "If you try to tell me that you are Santa Claus, I'll be damned if I don't crown you with this wrench."

The next Pan-American conference convenes at Havana in January. The United States will be represented by a strong delegation, with possibly Charles Evans Hughes at the head.

All bids should be sent to Clark W. Kinzie, Trustee, Box 558, Sterling, Colorado.

THE THIRD TERM ISSUE

At the time President Coolidge made his announcement that he did "not choose to run in 1928," plans were in preparation for a revival of the fight against a third term in the presidency. While many were skeptical as to the President's sincerity, and assumed that he was merely resorting to a politician's trick, the statement was generally accepted as an honest expression of a fixed determination. When Senator Fess began his meanderings about the country insisting that the President would run despite his statement to the contrary, the skeptics multiplied; and when the President was reported to have rebuked the Senator some of these became believers again—but not all.

Now comes the report that with the President out of the race there will be a serious difficulty because of the conflicting aspirations of Charles Evans Hughes of New York and Mr. Hoover of California and Europe, and that the President must be drafted. Meanwhile the prospective candidates are manifesting a strange timidity about their own intentions; and the impression is now prevalent that the President is a candidate and will be a candidate when the convention meets.

If he means that he was supposed to have said in his Black Hills statement he can easily put the skeptics to rout by using such plain, blunt speech as that of Mr. McAdoo when he took himself out of the race for the Democratic nomination. A few words can do that effectively and finally: "I am not a candidate and will not accept the nomination if offered."

In the absence of any such statement, the time has come for further discussions of the third-term idea. In 1875, as near the convention of 1876 as we are now to that of 1928, President Grant was occupying the same mysterious position as that of President Coolidge today. Men then, as now, were insisting that he should be nominated for a third term, and, if necessary, drafted. Many of his movement indicated a design upon the nomination. Other men with ambitions were holding back awaiting a definite announcement from Mr. Grant. This was not forthcoming. It was charged at the time that the plan of the President and his supporters was to permit things to drift in the hope that in this way public sentiment would not be stirred by discussions of the two-term tradition.

Then it was that a resolution was introduced in Congress setting forth the two-term tradition and it's wisdom. It was adopted by an overwhelming majority, albeit James G. Blaine, then one of the hopefuls, dodged into the cloakroom to escape the roll call; and Grant's angry comment that Blaine was "in no one's way" rather justified the resolution. The time for the public to soberly reflect upon the significance of breaking the tradition of Washington, Jefferson, Madison and Jackson is now; not after the convention. The resolution adopted to meet the case of Grant should be presented precisely as it was passed in 1875 for the action of Congress in December. If the President refuses to make his position clear there is all the more reason why the public should have no room to doubt its attitude.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The cigarette that knows how to "be itself"

There is no "pose" about Camel. It's just a good honest cigarette—the best ever—and it doesn't try to be anything else.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.
