THE NEW REGIME ON THE FARM

During the years from 1920 to 1925, the number of horses in the United States decreased about 25 per cent. At the same time, the number of tractors in use increased almost 100 per cent. The new regime on the farm had begun in earnest.

The obvious duties of the tractor, road building, plowing and like hard work were quickly appreciated. Its variety of new uses seem endless. It has become an integral part of logging camps, its carries supplies across difficult country, it digs irrigation ditches, and moves houses. The back-breaking task of transplanting celery has been made easy; and recently it has been used to help in the extermination of grasshoppers.

One of the most efficient instruments of war has become the tool of all work of peace. Our great mechanical age could be proud had it produced only the tractor.

Coldest Year in History of Known World

In 1816 There Was Snow and Frosts All Over the United States and Europe.

With the splendid weather that has marked the present winter season the residents of this locality will be interested in reading of what the dwellers in the United States and Europe had to put up with in the way of weather. An account of this year of cold and snow was brought to the Journal by C. A. Harvey and is re-printed for the benefit of those who feel that there is too much cold weather this year.

NO SUMMER. There Was a Ten-Inch Snow and Plenty of Ice in This July. From the New York Sun.

The year 1816 was known throughout the United States and Europe as the coldest ever experienced by any person then living. There are persons in Northern New York who have been in the habit of keeping diaries for years, and it is from the pages of an old diary, begun in 1810 and kept unbroken until 1840, that the following information regarding this year without a summer has been taken:

January was so mild that most persons allowed their fires to go out and did not burn wood except for cooking. There were a few cold days, but they were very few. Most of the time the air was warm and spring-like. February was not cold. Some days were colder than in January, but the weather was about the same.

March, from the 1st to the 6th, was inclined to be windy. It came in like a sudden storm and went out like a very innocent sheep.

Turned Cold in May. April came in warm, but as the days grew longer, the air became colder, and by May 1 there was a temperature like that of winter, with plenty of snow and ice. In May the young buds were frozen dead, ice formed half an inch thick on ponds and rivers, even was killed, and the corn fields were planted again and again, until it became too late to raise a crop. By the last of May in this climate the trees are usually in leaf and birds and flowers are plentiful. When the last of May arrived in 1816 everything had been killed by the cold.

June was the coldest month of the year ever experienced in this latitude. Frost and ice were as common as buttercups usually are. Almost every green thing was killed: all fruit was destroyed. Snow fell ten inches deep in Vermont. There was a seven inch snowfall in Maine, a three-inch fall in the interior of New York State and the same in Massachusetts. There were only a few moderately warm days. Everybody looked, longed and waited for weather, but warm weather did not come. It was also dry; very little rain fell. All summer long the wind blew steadily from the north in blasts laden with snow and ice.

Mothers knit socks of double thickness for their children, and made thick mittens. On June 17 there was a heavy fall of snow. A Vermont farmer sent a flock of sheep to pasture on June 16. The morning of the 17th dawned with the thermometer below the freezing point. At about 9 o'clock in the morning the owner of the sheep started to look up his flock. Before leaving home he turned to his wife and said, jokingly:

"Better start the neighbors soon; it's the middle of June, and I may get lost in the snow."

Searching Party Starts. An hour after he left home a terrible snowstorm came up. The snow fell thick and fast, and as there was so much wind, the fleecy mass piled in great drifts along the windward side of the fence and outbuildings. Night came and the farmer had not been heard of. His wife became frightened and alarmed the neighbors. All the neighbors joined the searching party. On the third day they found him. He was lying in a hollow on a side hill, with both feet frozen; he was half covered with snow, but alive. Most of the sheep were lost.

A farmer near Tewksbury, Vt., owned a large field of corn. He built fires around the field to keep off the frost. Nearly every night he and his men took turns in keeping up the fires and watching that the corn did not freeze. The farmer was rewarded for his tireless labors by having the only crop of corn in that region.
