Williamsburg, the colonial capital of Virginia is spending $2,000,000 to restore its Revolutionary aspect. A couple of other cities we know of would spend that much to get rid of theirs.

Tips to income tax payers are mostly for those paying the federal tax. Our legislature has given tips to the patrons of the state tax that don't sit well. But that is the way it is and we might as well look pleasant.

But the cry of "radicals" is an ill omen. The word "radical" is a bad word. It is a cuttlefish's cloud of ink. It can be depended on to befog almost any issue. Yell it often enough and loudly and you will soon have the public discounting everything your adversary says.

If Mr. Hughes is ashamed to make the keynote speech for the Republicans at the Kansas City convention, why not get Mayor Thomas of Jefferson City? Mayor Thomas thinks Senator Borah, who is trying to find $150,000 worth of virtue in the Republican party, is a nuisance, and he ought to make a ripping speech in defense of party rascality.

BEAUTY IN OPEN SPACES

Now that the census bureau population estimates for 1928 are out, we may expect state and civic boosters to begin calling attention to them. Florida is already pointing out that half a million more people live there now than in 1920; states like Michigan, which gained 900,000, and California, which gained a full million, will probably do likewise.

There is one state that probably will maintain a dignified silence. No estimate was made for Nevada; that state showed a decline in population between 1910 and 1920, and the census bureau tentatively gives it its 1920 figure—77,407.

So Nevada probably won't say much about the bureau's figures. Yet, to our mind, these figures give that state an excellent talking point.

Consider the situation for a moment. Our national population has gone up 10,000,000 since 1920. In this century we have seen the "open spaces" contracting steadily, year by year. Texas, once a synonym for a vast, thinly-populated area, now has upwards of 5,000,000 inhabitants. The rolling hills of Oklahoma are filling up. In the mid-western industrial areas cities like Detroit, Toledo, Indianapolis and Buffalo are constantly extending their borders. Millions of men and women do not know what it is to see an unfenced field.

But amid all this growth and expansion, Nevada remains Nevada of the past century. Its 110,000 square miles of territory support fewer people than live in a city like Canton, O. It is larger than all the New England states put together with a population of less than one-sixth of Rhode Island's alone. It is, we might say, an oasis of emptiness in a land of crowds.

The time is not far distant when the average American will come to appreciate openness of this kind at its true worth. When that day comes, Nevada will be host every summer to hordes of automobile tourists. This will be good for Nevada, and it will be good for the tourists.

For Nevada, praise Heaven, is still one of those states where you can drive all day without seeing a house or a tree or a fence or a town. It still has the marvelous, refreshing openness of the old west. Its air is as clear and sharp as though the world were newly-made its rolling sage brush plains are framed by backgrounds of distant, haze-wreathed mountains. The motorists has nothing to do all day long but soak himself in freedom and beauty.

So we repeat, Nevada's boosters ought to begin quoting the census figures. A decline in population would be a fatal blow to the pride of some states, but not to Nevada. A good part of that state's magnificence is the sparseness of its population.

THE HORSE REMAINS

So quickly does modern society adapt itself to progress that the concern Universally expressed a few years ago over the fate of the horses has, for the most part, vanished. We have accepted it as inevitable that Dobbin must go, have shed a hasty tear, and have easily forgotten the loss in admiration over the line of a new car. But some vague, deep-rooted, sentiment in almost every human being responds warmly to occasional assurances that the horse is holding his own; though we seldom see him, we do enjoy hearing now and then that Dobbin, as a tribe, is flourishing.

An investigator has just recorded his equestrian findings in McClure's magazine, and the substance of his message is that sixteen million, two hundred and seventy-nine thousand horses still win their keep in the United States, a figure far from disheartening in a motorized age. He supports this central fact with numerous statistics. There are more than fifteen million horses on farms alone, it was discovered, first-class saddle horses having increased in five years from one to five hundred in number. [The horse population has shifted somewhat, and includes now more aristocrats than formerly, because of polo and riding clubs, but it is still a substantial population, as far from extinction as ever. Though the figure is not given, many thousands of horses are retained throughout the country, no doubt, for the task of pulling stranded automobiles out of bogs.

Now that railway consolidations are open to them all, slowness is the word in taking advantage. One trouble is, that in these interests of all are protected. This sort of thing takes the edge off the deal.

Weeks pass. Guido Petti and Betty are in the studio alone.

Guido: (drawing her to him) So beautiful you are. Soon we shall go abroad—just you and I.

Betty: But—my husband—

WHAT IS WRONG WITH CHICAGO?

There is nothing mysterious about the plight of Chicago. It is to a degree the plight of every big American city. It is symptomatic of our national naivete that within a few days before the latest outbreak in Chicago the ministers of that afflicted city joined together in prayer to God that the city be saved.

God is not going to save Chicago. He is not going to save any of us from our own folly. The ministers of Chicago have had as much to do with the condition in that city as any other element of the population. They would be shocked if they were told this, but what are the facts?

The ministers everywhere, together with the great church denominations, have given us prohibition. They took the liquor business out of the hands of the State and the Government and turned it over to the worst element in every community. For regulation and license, which could be controlled by the authorities, they gave us bootlegging, moonshining and a great underground traffic which has filled all the big cities of America with gangs using bombs, sub-machine guns, sawed-off shotguns and automobiles.

The liquor industry in Chicago is a great industry. It will rank high among the big industries of the city. It handles immense sums of money, and its riches have given the underworld sinews of war and political strength which is never possessed until the ministers and the church people unwittingly delivered this great power into its hands. The underworld, which needs protection in the conduct of this vast business, and which does not want the state interfering with its own methods of adjusting disputes as to territory, prices, etc., etc., is in a position to elect its own prosecutor and its own Judges. What must one think of its power when one of the United States Senators from Illinois, Mr. Deneen, finds it politically expedient to leave his seat in the Senate and attend the funeral of the assassinated "Diamond Joe"?

Before prohibition the underworld in Chicago and every other big city sustained itself upon petty crimes and slender resources. Prohibition changed all that. It filled the coffers of the underworld and gave its leaders the audacity and power of capitalists. That is what is the matter

Two hours later Herbert bitterly accuses his wife.

Betty: Stop, Herbert! You don't know what you are saying. I swear to you—

Herbert: (flinging her aside) I'm through with you. I should have killed you as you lay in your lover's arms. Take what you want and get out.

with Chicago. It is also what is the matter with St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland and every other big city in America. Every one of them, when it comes time to decide who are to be in power in the community, will repeat to some degree the spectacle of Chicago.

REMUS, CRIME AND THE COURTS

A Remus semester. He shot and killed his wife last October. He was tried in December and acquitted on the grounds of insanity. He was committed to an asylum. He is now pronounced sane by the Third District Court of Appeals at Lima, O.

The pace that kills. In 122 American cities last year the homicidal rate was 10.4 per 100,000 population. In 31 of our cities which kept records back in 1901 the homicidal rate that year was 4.9. Our slayers have more than doubled the number of their victims.

When a man kills his wife and gets off with the nominal punishment of three months in an insane asylum killers?

Is there any relationship between the mockery of justice as witnessed in the Remus case and the growth of murderous crime?

Those questions are submitted to all courts of the land.

For the first time in seven years we visited Omaha last evening to visit our very esteemed and noble friend, Senator Jim Reed of Missouri, whom we have not had the pleasure of meeting for many years. It was indeed a cheerful greeting. A fine moment, and good to look at our dear friend, and sent our mind back thirty-five years ago when Jim was first elected mayor of Kansas City, and Missouri had elected Senator Vest by 55,000 majority. But those times are gone, and Senator Reed now in place of Vest, is up and booming for the democratic nomination for president. We enjoyed our short visit, and he promised to visit us, if possible during the campaign. We met many friends, among them was former Governor Bryan, Art Mullen, Senator Hitchcock and numerous others. We were accompanied on the trip by my son R. A. Bates, wife, and Lew Langhorst.

Simplification of the law and procedure should mean greater assurance for the meeting out of real justice through the elimination of the maze of technicalities and what not through which every litigation under the present system must wind its devious and lengthy way.
