That is a strange conception of journalism, albeit sometimes practiced hereabouts, that has no opinion about the Sinclair acquittal; but it has not been easy for the Republican press to admit the evils of the Harding regime.

The Chicago Tribune, for instance, thinks the Government went out of its way to get Sinclair. We are surprised to hear that. Sinclair bribed a high officer of the Government and took away from it by fraud and conspiracy one of the naval oil reserves. Upon discovering the crime, the Government undertook to recover the property and prosecute the men who, in the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, had unlawfully taken possession of it.

It was not actuated in this defensive movement by any desire to get anybody. It was in duty bound, for its own protection, to do what it did. No Government could do less. The attitude of many of the Republican papers towards the oil scandal has been abominable. From the Washington Post, owned by Ned McLean, himself exposed in the investigation, to the most reputable and respectable among the Republican newspaper, there has been an undisguised disposition from the outset to discredit the exposure and the men who brought it about. The Post thinks men like Senator Walsh are meddlesome Matties. That is, these men detect corruption in the Government and expose it. Their reward is to be characterized by the Republican papers as long-nosed persons prying into things that are none of their business.

The Republican press should be ashamed of itself. If it is afraid to say what it thinks of the Sinclair acquittal, as some of its representatives are, it still ought to be too decent to defame the men who exposed corruption or to charge the Government in that defensive action with the bad motive of trying to get somebody. The New York Herald-Tribune, foremost of the administration newspapers but still retaining its self-respect, says the outcome of the Sinclair trial should make every honest American blush.

That is a much more honorable type of journalism.

A UTAH CONGRESSMAN ON BOULDER DAM.

Although the supporters of the Boulder Dam Colorado river project have relaxed no vigilance or effort to win success, it is not certain by any means that the people of the seven states interested are wildly enthusiastic over the proposition. The awful tragedy caused by the giving away of the St. Francis dam in the San Francisco canyon, through which ran the Santa Clara river, with another dam in Nevada causing much damage, has not helped the Colorado proposition with the people. The Boulder Canyon dam is built will be 555 feet in height and will hold more water than all other dams combined, or at least a great mass of water, the power of which is not to be estimated. Then again it is not determined how the water power is to be divided, or where the government comes in, with more or less uncertainty as to the division of the water itself. The states concerned are unable to agree, with it being hardly thought congress can dot it for them. The contention is that the states own and control the water and power derived, yet the plan proposes the government shall put up for the entire cost, the starter being $125,000,000, and when the government is all paid off, then the revenues go back to the states. But where the income comes from is not stated.

Congressman Leatherwood of Utah is one of the doubters and when the matter came up on a request of the chairman of the irrigation committee for an immediate hearing of the bill, he is reported to have said as follows:

"The project is unnecessary and would, if undertaken, become a national scandal." Representative Leatherwood said. "Congress is here asked to buy another white elephant for taxpayers. A comparatively simple engineering job of flood control and river regulation, which should cost not more than $10,000,000 to $15,000,000,000, is made the excuse for an unprecedented engineering experiment costing not less than $200,000,000 and risking at least $200,000,000 more."

"The Utah representative declared that under the bill 'the federal government is not to stop when it has finished the job of river regulation and flood control, but is to provide a hydro-electric power supply adequate for more than half the present population of California, domestic water supply for 10,000,000 people, but non-existent, inhabitants of Southern California cities, and irrigation canals for hundreds of thousands of acres of new alfalfa, cotton and corn lands in the United States and water for hundreds of thousands of additional acres in Mexico."

"Political pressure, and not genuine necessity, unbecom, be spread by propaganda, and not facts; log-rolling trades, all employed over a period of six years—have placed the bill on calendars of congress."

"I challenge proponents of the bill to accept an amendment making the project contingent upon approval by an impartial, capable commission of qualified engineers and business men."

The voters of Nebraska are not satisfied with the primary law. Actually it is the biggest fraud that was ever put in law. A few more sections added to it, and voters will not even take the trouble to go to the polls.

"They were surprised when the watter did not speak to me in French," remarked the young man casually. "I write the perfume advertisements."

THE HUMAN SCRAP HEAP

Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, in an article in the North American Review, deprecates the growing practice in American industry of arbitrarily discharging workers when they reach the age of 50 or thereabouts.

This practice, if continued, will create a "serious and alarming" economic problem of national proportions, he believes.

Undoubtedly it represents one of the major issues that our times face. Some solution will have to be found before we can sit back and hymn the praises of our industrial civilization. The solution, probably, will come in due time; possibly through some form of industrial pensions, more liberal and extensive than anything now dreamed of. Industry is rapidly reaching the point where it can afford such a thing.

What does the movie combination intend to do with Will Hays, since it has been proved that he is as guilty as any of them in the oil gang? We thought well of Will until he got his foot in with that gang.

Not that we have any exact information on the matter, but we venture the opinion that even the information clerk does not do so well when little Willie begins to ask questions.
