Farmers are not for Hoover.
A poor girl who is called pretty is really handsome.
The east never was the friend it ought to be to the west.
A man is always discovering things that others knew long ago.
If the wild waves say anything, they probably tell fish stories.
In trying to win a girl's heart a young man often loses his head.
The easier a man is to approach the harder he is to get away from.
However, an instructed delegate is not quite so sure is a bird in the hand.
Airplane golf is the new game in New York. Ought to make lots of birdies.
The question is as to whether the platform will be bone dry or waterlogged.
A woman's idea of a hopeless fool is a man who praises some other woman.
A farmer says the most difficult thing he ever tried to raise was his mortgage.
The Yankees have a large following, including the rest of the American League.
Strict enforcement of the prohibition law, is a plain enough plank in the platform.
The average man is seldom willing to do the things he is constantly telling others to do.
Looks as though Senator Heflin might vote the Republican ticket with enthusiasm this fall.
It is "root hog or die" with the farmers. That's the advice they get from the Kansas City convention.
The Arctic region, where the nights are six miles long, is probably where the mosquitoes go when they die.
A woman drove 2,500 miles on a motorcycle to give aid to her son in Toronto, Ont. Yes, woman's place is in the home.
Theodore Roosevelt at Kansas City hotly denied that he is a candidate for anything including Governor of New York the last time.
It's getting to be quite a serious problem for a man about to marry to choose a little woman that will help him with the dishes.
Henry Ford continues collecting old horse cars, irons, furniture and other antiques. Wonder if he's got any 1925 Fords among them?
One more question about the companionate idea: About this time of the year, which one plans to take the separate vacation this year?
Some of the old inventions were pretty clever, after all. You must remember that the man who invented the kaleidoscope did not have the Balkans for an inspiration.
France will soon enjoy the best solidified government it has had for years through the sweeping victory of Poincaré. He will have a majority over all. The premier can now go ahead with his plans.
It is said that Rubens, the Dutch painter, produced 4,000 pictures during his life and that 4,000 of them are now in the United States. The answer is that we are clever in some things and credulous in others.
Another newspaper man is to enjoy prominence. This time it is Claude Bowers, author and editorial writer on the New York World, who will act as temporary chairman of the Democratic National convention.
To those who are proclaiming in such loud and vociferous tones that they will never, never vote for Al Smith for President, we would offer the gentle admonition that it is not good judgment to get too far away from the Democratic band wagon. You may fall to catch up again.

MR. HOOVER'S CANDIDACY

The nomination of Herbert Clark Hoover was made by the Republican national convention. It caps an amazing record of success in varied fields. Mr. Hoover's rapid rise to a world-wide reputation and political power must be credited to sheer ability.
After Mr. Hoover's graduation as an engineer from Stanford University he served for a short time in the United States Geological Survey and then went to Australia as a mining engineer. He was for a time chief engineer of the Chinese Bureau of Mines, and until the World War broke out was associated with British syndicates as an engineer and organizer. He was immediately chosen as head of the American Relief Committee in London and afterwards chairman of the Commission for Relief in Belgium. His efficiency in that work attracted President Wilson's attention, who brought him to America when we entered the war, as Food Administrator and chairman of the United States Grain Corporation. He was a member of numerous war boards and councils in this country and Europe. After the war he organized the work of supplying food to the starving European peoples and has been active in European relief since.
In 1921 President Harding appointed him Secretary of Commerce and he has held that office since, under two Republican administrations. Mr. Hoover greatly extended the activities of his department and has been the handy man of the administration. There is no doubt of his organizing ability and efficiency. Whenever an emergency arose or there was a problem to solve, it was Mr. Hoover who was consulted. He did the surveying of practical situations and suggested plans for action.
Mr. Hoover's activities have brought him a flood of degrees, medals and honors, and within nine years after his return to the United States he has won the nomination from the dominant political party to the highest office within the gift of the American people. As a member of the Cabinet and the choice of President Coolidge as his successor, Mr. Hoover has had the tremendous advantage of the administration's support of his candidacy. He has had an army of office holders gathering delegates for him, and he has had a large fund available for the expenses of a nationwide campaign. But with all this advantage there is no doubt that the most powerful Republican leaders recognize his ability and efficiency and selected him as a candidate who would give distinction and public confidence to the ticket.
With Mr. Coolidge out of the race, the contest for the nomination was rather easy for Mr. Hoover. But he faces rather rough seas for the election. The farmers of the Middle West and Northwest, who are the backbone of the Republican party in the West, are in revolt against Mr. Hoover's nomination on account of his fixing of farm prices during the war and his endorsement of the Coolidge policies which have been antagonistic to forms of relief demanded by the farmers. Large blocs of voters of foreign birth or origin are opposed to Mr. Hoover on account of his British affiliations.
There is another question to be met in the campaign. Admitting his ability and efficiency as an organizer and administrator, what are his qualifications for the chief executiveship of the United States? What are his political principles? He has served under both Democratic and Republican administrations. When he first returned to America, having lived abroad for 23 years and never having had any part in American politics, he was known as a Democrat. Now he is recognized as a republican, but no one knows precisely what his principles are.
No one knows precisely what are his knowledge of and attitude towards the fundamental principles of constitutional government. Where does he stand with reference to them? His chief activities have been administrative and bureaucratic. His tendencies have been to enlarge the functions of government, to put the Government's finger into business. It is his disposition to handle business problems with a strong hand, different from the Coolidge method of taking advice from business, which make business dubious of his fitness for the presidency.

What of his attitude towards privilege and plutocratic control of government?
Mr. Hoover has identified himself with the prohibitionists. The Republican platform endorsed the eighteenth amendment and in effect the Volstead act. What effect will this stand have on his political fortunes in the anti-prohibition East and the anti-prohibition cities that are strongholds of Republicanism?
The strength of Mr. Hoover's candidacy cannot be measured until he has spoken and until the issues of the campaign have been defined by both parties. His own attitude toward public questions with which he must deal if elected as President will determine his fitness and his political strength. Until that has been done independent judgment must be suspended.
A PROHIBITION CONFESSION
Have the chiefs of the prohibition unit at Washington been guilty of a tactful blunder in their treatment of the Republican national convention at Kansas City?
The public generally has come to consider the prohibition unit as one of the greatest propaganda bureaus ever organized anywhere. Its heads in public utterances have always insisted that prohibition was practical and that their forces of agents were making satisfactory progress toward the enforcement of the law. They have also insisted frequently that "the best people" are observing the requirements of the eighteenth amendment, as well as all other laws, being law-abiding folk.
The concentration, then, of all of the prohibition agents of several states at Kansas City for the Republican convention to see that none of the delegates chosen by the people of the entire country to this meeting to select a candidate for president of one of the two major political parties takes a drink, seems to be an admission that the unit has been "spoofting."
Certainly this gathering should represent the best the Republican party has to offer and the prohibition unit should reasonably expect them to behave themselves and observe the law, but the action in putting a hundred or more agents there to keep watchful eyes on the delegates would indicate they have no such expectations. And this is the ninth year of Volstead.
COMRADE THOMAS WILES
In the sudden death of Comrade Thomas Wiles, the G. A. R. loses one of its staunchest supporters and Cass County one of its best citizens. Being the last and present Commander, with not to exceed 8 members of the post, the writer is unable to officiate in his duty at the funeral of our true friend and many have been the happy hours we have spent together. A noble comrade has gone to his last reward. The few grief stricken members of the Post, can do no more than say, Farewell, comrade. It will not be long until we join you in the happy land, where our suffering is no more. The writer being in the 86th year, cannot expect to spend many more days on this land of trouble. Farewell, Comrade Wiles, 'till we meet you in that land of love and peace.
THE IMMORTAL MULE
It is encouraging to read that the United States army, despite a vast increase in the use of motor-propelled vehicles, today has as many mules as ever before.
The mule is a hard individual to out. Industrious, silent, stubborn, and, at times, vengeful, he defies the combined efforts of Henry Ford and Secretary Davis to kick him out of his job. Since the army's infancy he has been a trooper; to the end of the army's days he will continue in that capacity.
We're glad of it. The army wouldn't be the army without the mule. And besides—if there were no mules, how would the sergeants cultivate those sizzling vocabularies without which no detachment of rookies can be drilled into shape?
The strength of Mr. Hoover's candidacy cannot be measured until he has spoken and until the issues of the campaign have been defined by both parties. His own attitude toward public questions with which he must deal if elected as President will determine his fitness and his political strength. Until that has been done independent judgment must be suspended.
A one man's convention is all you can make out of the Kansas City republican gathering.

The whirl of events tends to show that a colored congressman is liable to succeed the late Congressman Madden. The prospective candidate is said to be an able man.
