Knowledge is power propaganda. Al Smith will be our next president. Majorities are what count, and it is the delegates who vote. Every man has a mission of some kind. Find it and do your best. That French debt to us is not a puzzle. It is a straight proposition. News from China is not encouraging. But we hold on to our policy. Study of human character has its difficulties. There are so many of them. Strained humor is like strained other things. Something is found missing. At least once in every man's career he is ambitious to patent some freak invention. Tautology consists in repeating the thought. Example: He lived a short time in Chicago. An optimist is a man who figures the winning percentage of the Philadelphia Nationals anyway. We do not know if it is a commentary on civilization or not, but you never see an abandoned filling station. No one, we think, really has them, but perhaps there is no word to take the place of vice presidential "aspirations." "What do we call the time when we study public utilities?" "Oh, that," said little Johnny, brightly, "is our kilowatt hour." The two elements of a vacation are change and rest. The school vacation is a change for the mother and a rest for the teacher. Somehow or other, the instructions in the book never quite thoroughly cover what to do with the cards you have in your hand. "Anyway" remarked the man who looked at things philosophically. "I will not have to eat anything that grew in my garden this year." Now a psychological test is proposed for all automobile drivers. The idea is that the nerves are as important as is the skill. Very likely so.

THE PRESIDENCY

The President, says the Saturday Evening Post, is a great trustee. He is, indeed. It is often said that his is the most powerful office in the world, but how many of us realize how that power is exercised?

There are three branches of the Federal Government—the executive, legislative and judicial. That is, the President, Congress and the judiciary. They are not, however, equal. We have come to learn that this is a very great fiction. As a matter of fact, the President, since he appoints the Justices of the Supreme Court, is the supreme power. He has the power of veto, and the power of appointment.

Thus, all the branches of the Government take on the color of the executive. Congress may legislate as it will, but while the President exercises the power of veto and appoints the Justices of the Supreme Court, the power of Congress is reduced to the negligible.

This is why the Republican party, though frequently unable to control Congress, has in the three-quarters of a century since the Civil War lost the presidency but four times—twice to Cleveland and Wilson. The Cleveland regime was long ago. Most of us are unfamiliar with its fruits. Of the effect of Wilson in the White House we have a much better recollection. He believed in government for the benefit of the whole people, and that belief, through his initiation of legislation and his appointments, gave liberal color to the Government. He appointed Brandeis to the Supreme Court and Eastman to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Not to know how the influence of these men has liberalized application and construction of the law is not to know the difference between government for the people and government for privilege.

Mr. Coolidge has been in the White House five years. He has in that time put upon the whole Government the impress of his point of view. It is more apparent in his outright veto of the McNary-Haugen bill and his pocket veto of the Muscle Shoals bill than it is in his appointments. Mr. Harding appointed four of the present Supreme Justices, including Chief Justice, Mr. Taft. The fruits of that power are ripening still. Mr. Coolidge has made but a single appointment to the Supreme Court, and that a good one. He named Justice Stone. Brandeis, Holmes and Stone are the liberal wing of the court. Whatever chance there is of a popular victory in the great railroad valuation case lies with these men. It is a much better record than Mr. Coolidge has made in the appointment of Mr. Humphrey to the chairmanship of the Federal Trade Commission, or his manipulation of the Tariff Commission for the benefit of the Sugar Trust.

Truly, the President is a great trustee—far greater than most of us have any idea. Did you realize what his power is and how it is exercised we would not thoughtlessly say that the Republican and the Democratic parties are indistinguishable. They are easily distinguishable in those differing points of view which give color to the Government when they are in power. The Cleveland regime gave us a lower and fairer tariff, and to the Wilson regime we owe the income tax and the Federal Reserve Bank. The Wilson regime also instituted (1) the Federal Trade Commission, which serves, when it is not interfered with, to stop unfair practices in trade; (2) the Tariff Commission, which, if freed from political meddling, contemplates a scientific, rather than a political, basis for tariff-making. Unfortunately, the Democratic party has been chiefly confined to state and municipal government, but the Republican party most of the time controls the White House.

There lie the power and glory.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

REED CONGRATULATES SMITH AND PROMISES HIS SUPPORT

Senator James A. Reed of Missouri sent this telegram to Governor Smith:

"Gov. Alfred E. Smith, Albany, N. Y.: I send you my warmest congratulations and my warmest hope for your success, to which I will contribute as much as possible.

"JAMES A. REED."

A professor tells his class that the genesis of human thought begin with the creation of man. To which a student says, "Professor, you are safe in this statement for it can not be disputed, but Eve thought wrong.

When you stop to consider that a man can misplace $750,000 in Liberty Bonds, is it any wonder that he failed to remember how much he contributed to the campaign fund?

THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH

The American democracy right now is not endangered nearly so much by blind materialism as it is by misguided idealism, says Dr. Arthur T. Hadley, president-emeritus of Yale, in an article in the current Yale Review.

Dr. Hadley goes on to explain: "Any period of rapid intellectual development is attended with a certain amount of social disorganization. New ideas which it has inspired and new methods of life which it makes possible, conflict with the traditions of an early age. Social order does not quite keep pace with scientific progress. The effect of the new thought is a good deal like that of new wine in old bottles. It always means unrest; and sometimes means disaster.

"The unexampled progress of the physical sciences in recent years bids fair to have somewhat the same kind of effect on the world of today that the study of Greek philosophy had on the world of Athens, or the revival of learning upon medieval Europe. The new light is making it hard for men to govern their conduct by old lights. Traditions which once proved adequate for the protection of society are now losing their power."

There is a surface placidity to our life today; but inwardly there is a world of unrest. Members of older generation feel that society is being torn loose from its moorings and slipping toward rudderless disaster. The new generation, in turn, feels that its growth is fettered by old-worn creeds and maxims. You cannot read a magazine without encountering some despairing cry of pessimism.

In all of this confusion, the one man who is unworried is the materialist. He knows precisely where he is going and what he is doing. While the rest of us look in vain for a light, he plods along, flooding the country with autos, radios, chain stores, giant power plants, airplanes and so on. Without realizing it, or caring greatly, he is remaking our civilization. We cannot stop what he is doing, we can only try to understand it and figure out how to get this new order to yield the largest returns in happiness and spiritual well-being.

There is where the danger of misguided idealism lies. If we try to fit this new order to the ideas and ideals that served us half a century ago we shall make a fine hash of things. We must study it carefully and prayerfully, so that we can adjust ourselves as well as possible. It is no use regretting the change; we cannot hold it back. We are confronted by a great fact.

Congressman Berger, in a bill, wants World War veterans incapacitated for any work, to receive from $100 to $150 a month, and the totally blind, $250 monthly; those with loss of both eyes and one limb or both, $300 a month. This is generous on the part of Mr. Berger, but will congress make good?

Henry Ford is human. He will not visit Ireland because they make him pay tariff duties on materials for his auto factory. But Ireland is hard-minded.
