RAILWAY WORKERS OBJECT. Chicago, Jan. 4.—Attempting to prove their assertions that the terms of a wage scale agreement entered into by the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes and Railway Shop Craft and the Chicago & Northwestern railroad in 1927 were being evaded, brotherhood representatives today introduced testimony from employes before the United States board of mediation here.

Employees of the bridge and building department in letters related that cooks, carpenters and section men were shifted about and certain positions which received wage increases under the 1927 agreement were abolished the men being forced into other positions at lower pay.

The controversy hinges on the rights of a railroad to interpret the terms of the agreement in its own manner, the Chicago & Northwestern taking the attitude it has the right to shift men on certain lines of work as the needs may require.

About 4,000 maintenance of way employes are affected. Other railroads have similar agreements.
