So far, the part that the alienists have played in criminal trials has been more distressing than helpful. It is time for just such a serious, intelligent, specialized, hard-headed, scientific bit of research as the one contemplated. It is hardly likely that even this well-planned program will result in an early complete understanding of the cause and cure of of Anna A. Ellington praying that crime. But it is a fine beginning."

Is a mind perverted a mind diseased? Some will say not a physical pital. Yet it must be admitted that misformations of the head and brain powers upon lines of morality and right living.

So crime may be a disease with some, or moral turpitude with others, temptation in others, and in passion, and over excitement is still more. There can be no cure for passion, or from undue acts of provocation, but possibly so for other forms. As to self defense, the factor of crime does not attach, nor or the honor of the name.
