FRED HOFFMAN.

Movement for Short Route.

There is a movement for a shorter route for the east, and a better road to the county seat, being worked out by the residents of western Cass county. Now that there is a hard surfaced road most of the way from the western line of Loupville precinct, the precincts of South Bend and Salt Creek as well as Greenwood precinct are agitating a better road along the precinct line, and with the expense being distributed over the various precincts of the county itself, the expense will not be heavy on either of them. This would give this portion of the county a better road to the county seat and at the same time a shorter route to the east via the new Missouri river bridge which is just completed at Plattsmouth. A meeting of the voters of Greenwood and Salt Creek precinct will be had shortly to further consider the proposition.

Saw Much Early Nebraska.

Mrs. Jane Coleman with her 84 years and many of them spent in Cass county, Nebraska, where she has lived in the vicinity of Greenwood most of the time, has been feeling quite poorly for a portion of the time this winter, and while this is the case, has showed much improvement and with the better condition of the weather is much better and enjoying the later weeks nicely.

'Dual Control' in Prohibition Transfer Hit

'Buck Passing' to Develop Foes of Bill Assert; Jurlyless Trials Upheld by Dean

Washington, Feb. 6.—Trial without jury in "casual" prohibition cases as recommended by the Hoover law enforcement commission, was both favored and denounced in congress Thursday.

Senator Wagner (D.), of New York, in the senate attacked the proposal as constitutionally wrong and therefore defective.

Chairman George W. Wickersham of the President's law enforcement commission and Dean Roecco Pound, dean of Harvard law school, a member of the commission, before a house committee defended the proposal.

It is legal and should be put into effect to relieve court congestion, they declared.

Announcement was made that the Wickersham commission will hear Representative L. C. Dyer (R.), Missouri, March 5, on his request that the commission consider a 75 percent beer as an aid to law enforcement; also whether it is permissible under the Eighteenth amendment.

Dual Control Approved A storm of opposition to the Williamson bill transferring prohibition enforcement to the Justice department broke out in the house from many members, who said the dual authority provided between the Justice and Treasury departments in issuance of permits to legitimate industrial alcohol users will result in a "buck passing" of responsibility.

Some members clamored for retention of full authority by the treasury over issuance of industrial alcohol permits. Others wanted the authority placed entirely in the Department of Justice. Party lines of prohibitionists and anti-prohibitionists were sundered.

Opposition to the Justice department having anything to say over permit issues has come from industrial alcohol manufacturers and users.

Mitchell "Dry Czar" Williamson (R.), South Dakota, author of the transfer bill, which has the backing of President Hoover, stoutly insisted it leaves no room for "passing the buck" between the treasury head and attorney general; that Attorney General Mitchell virtually is made "dry czar."

Dean Pound told the Christopher commission that the constitution does not give the right of trial by jury in minor or petty law violations. —Bee-News.

RESCUE TEST A SUCCESS

Aboard U. S. S. Falcon, off Key West—The crew of the submarine S-4 was brought to the surface of the gulf of Mexico Thursday in a diving bell designed by the navy department. The bell, similar to the O'Rourke bell, successfully operated last week, brought up the men from a depth of seventy feet.

In the operation Thursday, the bell was lowered over the motor hatch of the submarine by the Falcon and the hatch opened by members of the submarine crew. The men entered the bell and were lifted to the surface to be taken aboard the Falcon.

The navy department's bell is similar in design to the O'Rourke bell. It is open at the bottom, depending upon air pressure to keep out the water. Successful experiments Wednesday were conducted with a bell of the enclosed type designed by a Gorton, Conn., boat company. Operations with all three devices, officers said, demonstrated their value in rescuing crews entomped in disabled or deranged craft and in sending workmen to such vessels.

Young Indians Seek Right to Express Self

Hope New Policy of Government Will Make Schools More Elastic

Wichita, Kan.—Unlike the white boy, the Indian youth has not developed the hopes and aspirations which lead to accomplishment. Much responsibility for this lies in the door of the Indian education system as it has been practiced by the Government. It has not been productive of individual thought or higher ideals. The training has not been of the kind to develop individual responsibility.

At a very early age the Indian boy is taken from his home and parents and is sent to some distant Government school. Often it is necessary to send the boy because the parents are in such straitened circumstances that they cannot send him to a local school.

A system used by a certain agent on a reservation to get parents to send their children to school proved very effective. About the last week in August he posted a notice to the effect that no money would be paid off to Indian parents unless they have sent their children to school, and course the parents had to comply with this order if they are in need of the money.

This same agent had told a certain Indian woman that she could not send her children to a Government school as she was able to afford to educate her own children. This Indian woman has four children of school age and only two of them are attending school. The other two are working due to necessity. Surely there should be some uniform rule on this question to determine who should and who need not be sent to a Government school.

Surrounded by Restrictions When the boy reaches an Indian school he finds himself in company with several hundred other Indian boys of various sizes, ages and tribes. As soon as he enters the gate he is under the supervision of the disciplinarian, who has no time for each individual boy.

The Indian boy finds that he has to obey certain rules and regulations of the school and that the punishment is often severe for the infraction of one of the rules. The boy finds himself a cog in a machine.

He has to line up with the other boys to march to meals, he has to go through military drills, march to the classroom and other school functions that he is required to attend. He is assigned to a certain company, or room in the dining room, he is assigned to do certain work. Soon he does everything in a mechanical way.

In the long run he loses that sense of responsibility so important in life. He gets used to having someone push him along at the time he needs to do something. The routine used for the push is not very gentle. This system often destroys whatever initiative the youth may have had when he first came to the school.

No Time to Think for Himself Is it any wonder that the Indian youth has little desire to nurture his own mind? The routine activities come so tiresome that the Indian boy looks forward to vacation with far more eagerness than the white boy. He does not have the time for meditation or to think out what he is going to do when he gets out of school. This is not very surprising that he can call his own. There is not always someone to give him advice or discuss with him such fields or work in which he may be interested.

If the new policy of the Government aims to remedy some of the defects of the present system of education of the Indian, then the Indian youth is heartily in favor of it. A pressing need is the revision of the course of study as followed by the Indian schools of today. The course is drawn up by some people, possibly in Washington, who seem to think that all the Indian needs is an elementary education, that the Indian is far inferior to that of the white boy. The course usually differs greatly with the State requirements, and as a result the credits of the Indian schools are practically worthless and are not acceptable for work in a higher school. Each Indian school should work with the state in which it is located in drawing up its course of study. In this way it may be possible for the pupils in Indian schools to get credit for their work in Government schools.

The personnel of the Government employees is another thing that needs attention. The present staff of employees is below the average in efficiency, and old methods of teaching are practiced. It is almost impossible to make changes in schools due to so much red tape. Other employees are even more pronounced in their lack of efficiency. Only a few of them are trained thoroughly in their line to instruct Indian pupils. There are some employees who are prejudiced against the Indians.

Fail to Get Boy's Confidence There are some regular slave drivers in the Indian Service and the sooner they are weeded out the better it will be for the Indian. The Indian boy learns to fear these white employees and as he grows older this feeling really never leaves him. New employees should be put in the Indian Service who know how to gain the confidence of the boys; this move will develop character in the Indian boy.

Military training is stressed in the government schools. This would be very fine if we were an imperialistic nation, but we are striving for just the opposite, if the present activities of the Government is any criterion of the attitude of the Nation in world matters. The Indian boy dislikes to drill as do other boys. This phase of the government schools should be done away with as impractical.

The Indian schools attempt to carry on academic and industrial training at the same time. The pupil goes to school half a day and works the other half. The industrial training given the present day industrial demands. The Indian boy gets academic training for a half day where the white boys goes to school a whole day and both are supposed to cover the same work in one year.

The Indian boy will welcome any new policy which will enable him to receive such training as
