Did Excellent Work.

Messrs Walter and Alonzo Stewart, on account of the warm evening, sat on their porch on last Tuesday evening before retiring and along near the middle of the night they perceived a car come and stop a short distance from them, and the occupants, two men, leave in a suspicious manner. They shadowed the men, as they felt that there was something not right in their actions. They followed the men until they went to the store of Cope and Anderson, where they broke into the store. Then it was time for the watchers to act, which they did. They got A. R. Birdsall and George Trunkenzoltz, city marshal, and who called the State sheriff from Lincoln. Marshall Trunkenzoltz showed his firm hand when he went and crippled the car by detaching a number of wires, so that when the men were ready to go they would have difficulty in the starting of the car. They then went back and watched the wheels at the store. Finally after they had gotten what goods they wanted piled up ready to load, the would-be robbers left the store, one going to secure some gasoline while the other went to the car. He tried to start it but it did not start. He then got out and looked under the hood to see why. It was then that the party had the rush and commanded the man to stick up his hands by Mr. Trunkenzoltz and he was arrested.

Following close on this the state sheriff and posse came and securing the culprits took them to Lincoln. Much credit is due to Fessra Stewart, Walter and Alonzo, for the clever shadowing of the men and also to A. R. Birdsall and George Trunkenzoltz for the clever manner in which the matters were handled afterwards.

This is liable to deter some of the would-be bandits from their actions in the future.

Bill's Fate Hangs Upon New Pitfall

Cheese, Cherries, Watches and Rayon Cause Muddle; Plan Must Go Back for Debate.

Washington, May 23.—The fate of the Smoot-Hawley-Grundy $1,000,000 tariff bill hung upon the outcome of a trick parliamentary situation Friday, after the senate and house conferees had reached a compromise on the disputed flexible feature.

No sooner had the conferees heaved sigh of relief as their labors ended than it was discovered they had exceeded their authority in fixing rates on cheese, cherries, rayon and watches. So a series of feverish conferences among senate and house leaders began to extricate the measure from the latest pitfall.

Bill May Die.

The four items are subject to points of order, which means that the bill will be thrown back into conference again, with the prospect that the house will insist upon taking the $1 per thousand cubic feet off of soft lumber, which is demanded by the northwest.

In the event lumber is restored to the free list, republican leaders fear they will lose two or possibly three votes for the final conference report. With the narrowest sort of margin to work on, as demonstrated by the voters on the flexible and debenture provisions, the measure might die in conference.

Fix Own Rule.

While week-end conferences may straighten out this difficulty, the republican leaders are greatly concerned over the situation. One plan suggested is to have the senate fix its own rule by a majority vote. If that fails, senate leaders are seeking an agreement from the house conferees to merely adjust the rates on the four disputed items and leave the "house" other rates as previously agreed upon.

Senator Smoot, chairman of the finance committee, plans to submit the conference report to the senate on Monday and have a showdown on the points of order on Tuesday.

Power to Veto.

In view of the Bost speech made by President Hoover during the campaign, the compromise on the flexible feature, which is said to have the approval of the White House, is nothing short of amazing. In that address, the president declared that the American people would never agree to the tariff rate-making power being delegated to a commission.

For that is just what the commission does. It makes the tariff commission a bipartisan, fact-finding, rate-making body and gives the president power only to approve or veto its findings within a 60-day period.

Fight Compromise.

The president had previously insisted that no change be made in the present flexible law, which merely made the commission a fact-finding body and left entire discretion to the president in raising or lowering rates by 50 per cent of the existing duty.

Democratic leaders immediately announced that they would fight the compromise provision. Senator Simmons of North Carolina and Harrison of Mississippi protested that it would turn the legislative functions of congress over to a commission.

This opposition insures a real battle over the adoption of the final conference report. But that was to be expected in any event and the real worry of the republican leaders is to get around the trick parliamentary situation.—Omaha Bee-News.

NEBRASKA STEAM AND LAKE POPULATION RAPIDLY GROWS

Induced by a fixed determination in the minds of the members of Nebraska Game, Forestation and Parks Commission that the pleasures of the great outdoors in Nebraska shall be conserved and multiplied for present and future citizens, the streams and lakes are being rapidly stocked with game fish. By annual planting of trout, perch, bass, crappies, catfish, bullheads, sunfish, pickerel and pike, all adapted to Nebraska waters, and the elimination of the native coarse fish—carp, buffalo, gar and suckers—which each fall are seized from lakes and streams and sold on the markets, the waters of this state are being made places of increasing interest and importance to young men and old boys and everyone else who has not lost the native impulse to drop a baited hook in the water and pull out a funny monster.

The plantings are being made from two sources—from sloughs, irrigation ditches and ponds, into which fish run at high water times, and from the four fish hatcheries located at Gretna, Valentine, Benkelman and Rock Creek in Dundey county. Last fall a total of 1,284,530 game fish were rescued from winter destruction in sloughs, ditches and ponds by agents of the game commission and placed in deep water. Most of the rescued fish were bullheads but perch and crappie in generous amounts were in the catch. The four fish hatcheries last year contributed 2,154,979 game fish and frogs to Nebraska lakes and streams. These were quite impartially distributed over the state in the commission's fish ware, Walthonia and in special tank trucks owned by the commission. Bullheads, a never catching favorite with young and old fishermen were easily first in number planted, but trout bass and perch were liberally provided. An invoice of the plantings show: Bass 314,384, perch 349,675, catfish 85,244, bullheads 687,141, crappies 141,174, sunfish 89,256, pickerel 1,276, trout 415,230, pike, 17,999, frogs 63,600.

The hatcheries in which the seed fish are spawned and grown to planting size are attractive places. Because of their interesting character and the wooded surroundings the hatcheries are visited yearly by thousands of visitors.

In another decade the waters of Nebraska will team with game fish and lovers of the rod will not need to go to distant lakes and streams in search of quarry. The program of the game commission includes a continuance of annual planting on a large scale and vigorous enforcement of game laws devised to protect fish from wanton destruction and true sportsmen from the invasions of wholesale fish hogs who have not acquired the virtues of that patron saint of out door sport, Izaak Walton.
