The life of every man is the latest link in an unbroken chain of immeasurable extent and variety.

It is possible for a girl to love a poor man, but it would be a lot easier to love him if he were rich.

The last thing a girl used to do at night was plait her hair, now it is washing her silk stockings and—

Add tragedies: The unfortunate tramp who asked the stock market victim for a nickel for a cup of coffee.

Next year's open tournament will be held at Toledo, and Lake Erie is a hard place from which to recover balls.

Of course you have heard of the refined panhandler who asked a passerby for 15 cents to buy a chocolate malted.

Chicago police can stop a few dogs from running round a track, but they don't seem to do much running round after hoodlums.

Automobiles are replacing the traditional camel and donkey in North Africa. But they'll soon find out that a motor can also stall.

A Southern railway has equipped its locomotives with chime whistles. Are these the Southern belles we've heard so much about?

The campaign for the preservation of wild life is meant chiefly for the forests and rural sections; there's already too much of it in the cities.

Hockey, a news item says, is threatening to replace boxing as the mainstay at Madison Square Garden. Well, rubber battles were always more interesting.

Paul Hampden, son of the noted actor, is working in an automobile factory in Flint, Mich. Even taking automobile parts is great training for the stage these days.

Buried for 35 minutes under 15 feet of sand, a New York laborer asked the three policemen who rescued him for a couple of highballs. Of course the man had an extraordinary amount of grit.

An English educator has written a book on "The Ifs of History." It should be interesting as a relation of the adverse of fact. To speculate on what might have been is somewhat like working out a puzzle.

While it is a fact the mind itself does not tire, Dr. Francis G. Benedict, director of the nutrition laboratory of the Carnegie institution finds that pronounced physical fatigue follows intense mental effort.

"Corn shows little tendency to develop any strength at present," says a Chicago stock market report. Say, brother, you ought to try some of the corn down in this section if you want to encounter a manifestation of Hercules strength.

The telephone is a great invention. It enables you to talk back to your wife and be just as sassy as she is.

It looks disgusting to see a beautiful woman petting a lap dog when many men would like to be in her arms.

One of our gay young blades around town suggests that some of the dance orchestras should take up music.

Strange how long it's taking them to open up the bars since the country went west through the Literary Digest.

Social integrity is a cure for crime, a professor tells us. Yep, but how about a little political integrity to go with it?

The automobile tragedy list is appalling, yet the fact remains that more than 120,000,000 million of us were not killed last year.

An ideal wife is one who is as anxious to keep her husband as she is to keep her girlish figure and schoolgirl complexion.

Judging from training camp news it seems that the contestants for the heavyweight championship have developed good paunches.

Congress has spent so much time debating on the tariff bill and prohibition that it hasn't time to send out any free speeches to the voters.

The Harvard Club bridge team twice defeated the players from Yale. And probably because they had better training in tackling the dummy.

A New York Congressman has written a play. And probably because he wanted his constituents to know he was the author of at least a few acts.

A chemist declares that 87 different things can be made from coal. There's a fortune for some ingenious fellow who can make a decent fuel out of it.

Dwight Morrow was chosen the most outstanding graduate of Amhurst College in a senior class vote. Serves Cal right for declining to run for the Senate.

THE CRITIC

Congress, he thinks, has made a mess of everything, and there is not a really capable man in the whole federal administration or in the state or municipal administration for that matter.

Irritated by outcome of the London limitation arms conference, he can not, for the life of him see why a few men with common sense can not take hold of a simple problem and arrive at a reasonable solution overnight.

One of his chronic complaints is that gross carelessness and inefficiency abound on all sides. Now take, for instance, automobile mechanics and other craftsmen. They are no longer artists in their lines. The things he buys are carelessly made and work he engaged to be done is never done properly.

Why, he asks, should trains be late? Just another example of mismanagement and indifference. And traffic regulations, instead of speeding up traffic, actually impede progress. And what bungling there has been in law enforcement and the suppression of crime.

What is needed is intelligent, energetic direction. Now, if he were in a position of power, it would not take him long to obtain 100 per cent efficiency and service.

Having thus unburdened himself of the dissatisfaction with the world in general, he remembers that he hasn't voted for two years, must pay a large garage bill because he failed to keep the car properly oiled and greased, lost the discount on a sizable bill through procrastination, permitted a life insurance policy to lapse and has a dozen simple business problems that have been waiting his decision since the previous fiscal year.

THE TREATY AND THE SENATE

The present plight of the London Treaty in the Senate is not flattering to the statesmanship of that body. After being given an international treaty drafted and signed in pursuance of the widespread desire of the American people for strict limitation of naval armaments, the Senate committees have lost sight entirely of the real question of international conciliation implicit in the treaty and have confined themselves to an over-technical and futile discussion of mooted points of naval strategy and the science of warfare.

President Hoover took pains to select capable naval experts as well as diplomatic aids and two Senators to represent the United States at the London parley. All were under the leadership of Secretary Stimson. The consensus of their views, tempered by the conflicting views of foreign delegations, are embodied in the final draft of the treaty. Not all that certain American delegates sought was written into the document, naturally. Compromise was necessary, as it is in any international gathering. But that was understood when our delegation left American shores. Otherwise why have a conference?

The Senate is entitled to a full opportunity to examine the treaty, before giving or refusing its consent to ratification. But to search up and down for naval officers who are willing to oppose the terms of the treaty is totally unfair to the President.

Admiral Pratt brought out clearly the folly of technical criticism of the treaty when he discussed the merits of the six-inch and eight-inch gun cruisers. We don't know which is the better, the Admiral said, because we have never fought with either one. And yet we have the amusing spectacle of six-inch gun Senators and eight-inch gun Senators, trying the fate of the nation to their personal pre-elections in the technical field of naval warfare.

The question before the Senate, in short, is one of the broad national foreign policy, and merits consideration as such. It calls for the highest caliber of statesmanship, the fullest sympathy with the larger problems of international life. Instead, it is being treated as a problem in naval mathematics, at the hands of men who are anything in the world but mathematicians. The President, in the light of this mistaken attitude in the Senate, has spoken emphatically of his wish to see the treaty approved at once. It is a challenge to the statesmanship of the Senate.

Otis Skinner, the esteemed actor, offers an explanation for rejection of plays by one after another of producers. It is an old and generally known fact that many of the most successful plays and stories have been "turned down" by leading managers and editors.

Coats and 90 in the shade.—Headline. Why is it required in summer time that a gentleman wear his coat everywhere except on the golf links or tennis court or in the swimming pool? Dignity demands it, some say.

Scaled bids will be received by Mr. Oris Schlieffert, Secretary of the Board of School District No. 96, Manley, Nebraska, for the building of school house in School District No. 96.

The school house to be of brick and tile construction, size 32x64 feet, two rooms and full basement. Said school house to be built in accordance with plans and specifications which will be found on file at the Manley State Bank, Manley, Neb., for the inspection of the contractors.

All bids to be filed with the aforesaid Oris Schlieffert, Secretary of the Board, at Manley, Nebraska, on or before NOON on Saturday, the 21st day of June, A. D. 1930.

Bids will be opened on Tuesday, June 24th, 1930, at 2:00 p. m. The Board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

From a business viewpoint it isn't enough that money is cheap. Business would rather know that bank rates are to be stable for a long period. Industrial and trade enterprises can not be organized on the large scale familiar to the United States so long as money rates gyrate hysterically, as they did last year.

We have heard of athletes being overtrained, but our idea of a man who gets that way is one who has had five or six wives.
