vised and Fanatical-'Kills Sociability'

Dubuque, Ia., May 28 .- Archbishop Francis J. L. Beckman of Dubuque, former bishop of Lincoln, Neb., believes "prohibition has killed sociability and has made real conversation a lost art."

"It is an ill-advised attempt by an impossible and unnatural means to correct an evil and thereby only opens the door to evil worse than the first; ill-advised because it ignores history," he said, speaking at a welcoming banquet given him last night by the Knights of Columbus of Dubuque.

"It is born of fanaticism and would attempt, as I said, the impossible and unnatural because it would legislate morals and attacks personal liberties. It is unnatural and therefore will never be able to be enforced. because it goes against the very nature of man and the ordinances of God-it would let abide the thirst and a desire for the natural and take away the natural for an object which is unnatural.

"Philosophy tells us and God himself tells us to dominate our passions and control our appetites and we do that when we know how to use an object with moderation. It is a medium, or middle, between two extremes, which calls for other extremes and makes the last evil worse than the first."—World-Herald.
