Better Outlook Seen for Labor as Spring Opens

Improvement Noted in March Report of Department at Washington —List of Idle Lessened Washington—Confidence that spring's acceleration of outdoor work generally would do much to alleviate unemployment was expressed by the labor department as it reported conditions already improved. On the heels of an announcement by Secretary Lamont of the commerce department that principal industries are maintaining wage rates, despite a campaign in some quarters for reductions, the labor department issued its March employment report showing general improvement. Employment of additional men was slight in some sections, but an increase in schedules in several industries, particularly automobiles, was reflected. Some automobile plants operated at virtually normal schedules, with some men on furlough recalled. "The upward trend previously reported in the iron and steel industry continued," the report said, "but operations in many of the mills remained below those usually in effect at this time of the year. While additional help was engaged in quite a number of these establishments a large surplus of this class of labor prevailed." Increased production in the automobile industry also brought some improvement in several of the larger establishments manufacturing tires. A large number of men were hired as the 1931 highway construction program started in many states. An increase in building was noted, and a steadily growing demand for farm labor was expected to continue thru April. "Conditions generally in the textile centers," the report said "showed little change. Curtailed schedules predominated, and many of these laborers were idle. However, there was some improvement in this industry, more particularly apparent in the New England states. Part time schedules prevailed in most radio plants, affecting a large number of workers, while seasonal industries were responsible for further curtailed employment in coal mines. "Municipal improvements and heavy construction projects were expected to be offering employment to many men soon."—State Journal.
