RAINS BRING NEW HOPE
 Washington—Moderate to heavy rains brought new hope to the dry northwest states, but parts of the south are feeling the pinch of moisture shortage. The weather bureau said recent falls had "afforded substantial relief in Washington, Oregon, northern Idaho, western and southeastern Montana, and most of North Dakota."
 "In addition," the bureau said, "the moisture situation is now rather markedly improved in much of South Dakota and more generally in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa."
 In the south, however, rainfall was again spotted and the bureau said: "Many places are in need of moisture, especially from western North Carolina and Tennessee southward, including about one half of Kentucky." About two-thirds of Georgia was said to be experiencing a "rather severe drought."
 Rains in the northwest in some places came too late to benefit materially small grains, especially those on the lighter soils, the bureau said, but they helped pastures, late grains and minor crops of all kinds.

Silver's Prime Need Declared to be Stability

Sir Arthur Salter Against Loan to China and Conference Plan

Stability is the prime need of the silver situation today, declared Sir Arthur Salter, former head of the economic and financial section of the League of Nations. In an interview with a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, Sir Arthur ranged himself both against a "silver loan" to China sponsored by the special subcommittee of the United States Senate in January and against the proposal backed by Washington of a government conference to discuss the situation.
 "Conferences are all very well to implement and settle the details of cut-and-dried schemes," he declared. "But as a rule they are not much use when no real basis of agreement has been found beforehand."
 Sir Arthur, who is in Boston on his way back to Europe, was speaking with the background not merely of his wide experience at Geneva but as one who, at the request of the governments concerned, has just investigated the situation in India and China, the world's two chief markets for silver. He is convinced, he said, that China does not need more silver. What she does need is to know that there will be no more wide variations in price, either up or down.
 For the past few months the price of silver has remained comparatively stable. If it can be pegged where it is today, the Chinese economic situation will be greatly benefited, Sir Arthur believes.
 Asked how stability could be secured without an international conference, Sir Arthur pointed out that it is not in the interests of the Indian Government, which has large stocks of silver to dispose of, to do anything which will send prices any lower. The chief thing to guard against, in his opinion, is a temporary rise in silver values. It would encourage the producers to increase the output and this would be disastrous.
 A voluntary agreement on output among the silver producers themselves is the first step to be taken, Sir Arthur thinks, after which he hinted it might not be difficult for the Government of India and the producers to get together and devise a plan by which new production and Indian stocks could share the world market until the surplus has been gotten rid of.
 Sir Arthur does not blame the silver crisis primarily on overproduction so much as on a change in the world demand. He has pointed out that India's currency is no longer based on silver but on gold. So are the currencies of Japan, the Philippines, the Federated Malay States, Indo-China and Siam. In Europe, too, several countries have substituted nickel for silver in their token coinage.
 He advocates research to get rid of the disadvantage of silver, such as its liability to tarnish, and publicity to make its merits better known.
