Want Bridge Straightened The road running west from Greenwood and which connects with a very good road a mile west of town in Lancaster county, was graded last fall and is ready for that long talked of coating of gravel, which may be secured by the community matching dollars with the county. In this stretch of roadway, there is a bridge that sets at an angle with the highway, over Salt Creek, making a dangerous place if the road is to be opened to extensive all weather travel. The board of county commissioners was here last Wednesday to look over the ground and get an estimate on the cost of placing a new structure there in direct line with the road and at the same time offering better drainage facilities when the creek goes out of its banks. The entire board, George Farley, of Plattsmouth, E. B. Chapman, of Union, and Fred Gorder of Weeping Water were here to personally inspect the bridge and go back prepared to make their recommendations. It is hoped that this piece of road can be hard surfaced in the near future, as it provides an inlet and outlet to the west, through connection at the county line with a Lancaster county graveled highway, and may eventually be a cut-off route to points west, connecting up with the S-Y-A highway northwest of Lincoln and eliminating a good number of miles of traffic for those desiring to get to Grand Island and points beyond, by enabling them to turn off the D-L-D here, instead of having to dip south to Lincoln some ten miles and then back north more than half that distance.

House Sustains Veto of Democratic Tariff

President Hoover Sends Bristling Statement in Message of Rejection of the Bill.

Washington, May 11.—Reacting immediately to a presidential veto message that bristled with denunciations, the house today voted to uphold President Hoover's flat rejection of the democratic tariff bill.

Hardly had the chief executive's blistering communication been read than Representative Snell, the republican leader, confident that the slim democratic majority could not produce the two-thirds vote necessary to override Mr. Hoover, demanded a roll call vote.

Representative Rainey, floor leader for the democrats, knowing too the limitations of his party strength, termed such action futile, but the roll call proceeded. The vote was 178 to override to 166 to sustain.

Dead for This Session. Thus the democratic proposal that the president be stripped of his authority to change import duties upon recommendation of the tariff commission is dead so far as this session is concerned. The measure proposed that the commission report to congress for action by the national legislature.

The president's rejection of the bill occasioned no surprise, but the bristling tone of his message was unforeseen.

He listed in detail four major objections against the house sponsored bill. But above any other he asserted it was enough that the measure would "destroy the effectiveness of the flexible tariff," and remove the protection against the "orgy of politics and log-rolling" accompanying each periodic general revision.

How They Voted. Only two democrats voted to sustain the president's veto. They were Representatives Conery (Mass.) and Montet (La.). Representative Kvale (Minn.), the lone farmer-labor member, voted with democrats to override the veto.

The republicans who voted with democrats were: Representatives Amble, Boileau, Nelson, Peavey, Schneider, Wittrow, and Stafford (Wis.); Campbell and Gilchrist (Ia.); Christian (Minn.); Morton D. Hill (Ill.) and Sincin (N. D.).—World-Herald.

GLASS BILL SIDETRACKED

Washington.—Charges that a senate banking subcommittee economist sent confidential information to Paris newspapers which caused withdrawals of gold from the United States were denounced by Senator Glass in the senate as untrue and "childish." His vigorous defense of Dr. H. Parker Willis against the accusations made on the senate floor by Senator Kean, New Jersey, came shortly before the Glass banking reform measure was laid aside temporarily, after four days of debate, to make way for the tax bill.

In agreeing to having his measure sidetracked, Senator Glass told the senate earnestly that "if it or something like it isn't passed we are going to have another era of bank failures in this country."

Glass said Willis is "as honorable a man as I ever came in contact with in my life, not in any measure exceeded in that respect by the senator from New Jersey."

Suggestions on Cleaning Milk Utensils.

Alkali or soda ash washing powder is a better cleaning agent for milking utensils than soap. The amount of washing powder to be used will vary with the hardness of the water. Brushes are much better to use when cleaning milk pails and cream separators than rags. Rags are hard to clean and sterilize and they have a tendency to smear the grease of the butterfat over the utensils rather than loosen it. In washing milk pails and other dairy utensils, cold water should be used first, then warm water and washing powder and then scalding water to sterilize the utensils.

Cleaning the cows' flanks and udders, milking with clean hands in clean pails and cooling the cream as soon as it is separated will do much to help market a good product during the coming hot summer months. Nebraska's well water when circulated around cream cans in cooling tanks will cool the cream to a safe temperature within an hour and a half.

Fertilizers for Leaves.

Whoever works out a cheap and easy way to rid the lawns of dandelions will have his fortune made. So far the most common method is to dig the plants out with a large knife or special tool or to squirt a few drops of gasoline, sodium chlorate, or sodium arsenate on the plants. Either of these methods is tedious.

Fertilizing the lawn and allowing the blue grass to grow will tend to crowd out the dandelions. Ammonium sulphate or some commercial fertilizer that is high in the nitrogen content is most commonly used for Nebraska lawns. The best way to apply the ammonium sulphate is to dissolve it at the rate of one pound to three gallons of water and then sprinkle this mixture on about 200 square feet of lawn. The sprinkling should be done in the evening or on a rainy day rather than when the sun is shining on the grass. Well rotted manure will add fertility to the lawn but it is unsightly and often full of weed seed. The ammonium sulphate can not be noticed and never contains any weed seed.

Use Poison Bran Mash for Cutworms.

The planting of corn on land that was not in corn last year will do much to control the damage done in some sections of the state in the last few years by corn root worms. If the stalks fell over badly last year the yield of corn was cut down considerably (and if the trouble seemed to be due to destruction of the corn roots by a worm, the field was probably infested with one of the four species of corn root worms. The only practical control measure is to plant the land to some other crop and grow the 1932 corn on land that was not in corn last year.

The corn root aphid, or louse, another insect that attacks the roots of corn, can be controlled by keeping down the weeds early in the spring and by thorough plowing and cultivation of the soil at that time to discourage the ants. The corn root aphid is helpless by itself and dependent upon ants for its food. Keeping the ants out of the corn field will control the aphid also.

A poison bran mash mixture composed of 100 pounds of bran, 5 pounds of white arsenic, 2 quarts of backstrap molasses and enough water to make a crumbly mash is scattered very thinly along the corn rows after four o'clock in the afternoon or during a cool cloudy day. The hundred pounds of bran and the poison will make enough to cover about twenty acres of corn if the mash is properly distributed.

"Tiniest American" Grows Up

You've heard of great Americans who had small beginnings, but here's one who holds the record. He is Charles Bernard St. John, who attracted world-wide attention when he was born in Kansas City, Mo., on April 3, at the bedside weight of only one pound. When this photo was made recently, Charles had nearly tripled his weight, pulling down the scale to 2 pounds, 14 ounces. He is shown with his mother, Mrs. William St. John.
