Fixing a plate glass front in a store building can always be depended upon to draw a crowd. ## AN AROUSED PEOPLE THE NATION'S HOPE

The national organization to reduce public expenditures came into being in Chicago on Friday. The members have enlisted for the duration. They have enthusiasm and a program. They have started what is unquestionably the most hopeful movement for putting an end to the depression to be found today.

They say that as long as the governments, federal, state and local, confiscate their growing share of the incomes of the American people year after year no sound basis for recovery can be established. They are right. They say that the curse of unemployment must continue until business is again on a profitable basis; and business cannot be profitable as long as the governments continue to add to the overhead burden. Again they are right.

These conclusions have become increasingly clear as the depression has grown in intensity. The organization did not discover the facts, but it has provided a machine for forcing the facts upon the politicians who alone can end the evil.

It is idle to pretend that measures of economy will be adopted if the politicians are left to themselves. The politicians have too large an interest in waste ever to favor economy for its own sake. So, too, have the allies of the politicians, the bureaucrats and pay rollers, hungry as they are for more power, more jobs and better paying jobs. Economy, if it is to be achieved, must be imposed by the people on their governments. It can be imposed only by such a show of organization and numbers that no elective official will dare defiance.

The great pride which the American people have taken in their system of government has led many of them to assume that our governments can do no wrong. If this depression has taught us anything, it has taught us that our governments can make mistakes and that these mistakes, if persisted in, will ruin us all. Majorities in congress and the legislatures are no more infallible than any absolute monarch.

The great merit of our system is not its freedom from possible error but the freedom of the people to force changes in government policy. That freedom, needless to say, imposes a duty upon citizens to play their part. If they sit by with folded hands while the lawmakers destroy the nation with taxation, there is no hope for us. It is precisely at this point that the organization derives its significance. It offers a rallying point around which the constructive forces of the nation can gather. If the people wish to save themselves from hunger, cold and civil disorder, they now have been provided with the means to do so.

Of course, a great deal of damage was done by congress's delay in balancing the budget, but congress seldom does things hastily. It waited thirty-four years to be sure Richmond Pearson Hobson was deserving of a medal of honor for his feat at Santiago.

We ought not to destroy individual freedom, but put limitations on it which will prevent detrimental excesses; utilize it but not abuse it; bridle greed, and adjust it to serve the general welfare instead of individual ambition. It is a difficult task, but not impossible. We believe American ability and energy, which have been demonstrated so thoroughly, are equal to it. We must think in terms of construction, not destruction. It is futile to look to the state to do everything for us.

It would be rash and foolish to resort to destructiveness, tyranny or regimentation. We can do what we should do as a democracy, with the co-operation of the government. We can make the machine a blessing instead of a curse. Forward, not backward.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A DIFFICULT TASK, BUT NOT IMPOSSIBLE

The intelligence, ingenuity and initiative for which the American people are distinguished are put to the supreme test in this economic crisis. We have built up the most wonderful industrial and commercial civilization the world has known. Our invention and energy have led the world. Other nations have come to us to learn how to make machinery and how to operate it, how to produce with least cost and labor.

We have given the world labor-saving devices, quantity production through the use of machinery. The communists, with the latest form of co-operative government, without our machinery and experts would have been helpless to industrialize their country. We have instructed them, and if they succeed it will be through our leadership and advice.

Now the pressing question is whether we can readjust this system so that it shall work for the welfare of all. The ideal of the machine and the devices to increase production was that these were to be the servants of mankind. They were to serve all, not only in giving increased comforts and conveniences, but by distributing their benefits and profits to everyone able and willing to work with them. We dreamed of the day when our ingenious inventions and constructive talent would decrease the labor and increase the resources and comforts of all the people.

Shall we abandon this ideal and begin all over again with doubtful experiments, or readjust and perfect our system so that we shall realize our dream of general prosperity and contentment? Besides the agitation for political changes inimical to individual freedom, there are suggestions of recurrence to more primitive ways. We are told that the thing to do is to disintegrate and go back to pioneer ways, when every man was his own farmer, weaver and manufacturer. We would abandon our original idea of a co-operative democracy in which men made what they could make best and for least cost, and exchanged it for the products of others who did the same thing.

We are past the pioneering age. We have vast resources to be developed on new lines. Practically all of them have been explored and opened up to a large extent. We cannot grow as we have grown, but we can still grow and prosper, and our problem now is not to open our resources for development for the service of greed and personal ambition, but to conserve and utilize them for the benefit of all.

Despite its abuses and evils, our system has accomplished more for the happiness and prosperity of the people than any that has ever been tried. Its abuses and evils have been exposed by excesses and consequent disasters. It can be saved. By the elimination of abuses and evils, we can retain all the advantages we have gained by a century of extraordinary advancement. The work of readjustment is beginning. Congress is commencing work on reforms in the economic system which will check speculation and adjust credits to needs, but there is much to do.

We ought not to destroy individual freedom, but put limitations on it which will prevent detrimental excesses; utilize it but not abuse it; bridle greed, and adjust it to serve the general welfare instead of individual ambition. It is a difficult task, but not impossible. We believe American ability and energy, which have been demonstrated so thoroughly, are equal to it. We must think in terms of construction, not destruction. It is futile to look to the state to do everything for us.

It would be rash and foolish to resort to destructiveness, tyranny or regimentation. We can do what we should do as a democracy, with the co-operation of the government. We can make the machine a blessing instead of a curse. Forward, not backward.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
